Speakers at the Press Conference yesterday in the Capitol:

Joshua Kanter: Founder of An Alliance for a Better Utah.

Registered Democrat, Donated $20,000+ in 2008 & 2010 election cycle. Obama, Clinton, DSCC, DNC, John Kerry, DCCC

John Hansen: Registered Democrat, SLC

Mayor Peter Corroon: (D) Salt Lake County Mayor. Called redistricting process un-American. Ran for Governor in 2010, major recipient of donations from Bruce Bastian, Howard Dean, AFL-CIO, Labor Unions, supporter of non-partisan "Fair Boundaries" initiative whose maps where drawn by Democrat operative, adviser and former UT Dem Party Exec-Director Todd Taylor.

David Irvine: Donor to Democratic Presidential candidate Wesley Clark, President Barack Obama, DNC. Attorney who has sued Utah and has received millions of dollars from Utah taxpayers in law suits.

Sen. Ross Romero: Senate Minority Leader, Candidate for SLCO Mayor, Democrat

Glenn Wright: "non-partisan Fair Boundaries" Director. Former Summit County Democrat Party Chair, caught using partisan map drawn by UT Democrat Adviser and former Executive Director

Speaker Up & Peace Up Activists; Tim DeChristopher's friends, sat on UTA TRAX to protest coal power.

MaryAnne Martindale: Exec Director of Alliance for a Better Utah, Democrat AG campaign manager, democrat operative, registered democrat. Won't release her salary or fundraising information for Alliance for a Better Utah.

No "legitimate" republicans, tea partiers, independents or non-partisan people spoke at the "non-partisan" rally.

As an observer, I find it offensive that groups would be so blatant in their partisan bias while trying to maintain the "non-partisan" citizens title.

A Message from Senator Aaron Osmond

Wednesday, October 05, 2011

Dear Friend in Senate District 10:

I hope all is well with you and your family! We've been busy at the Legislature this summer with many issues important to you. I will provide you a general update on these items in another email. In this email I wanted to focus my full attention on a very important topic: Redistricting.

What is Redistricting?

Redistricting is the redrawing of political district maps. It happens every 10 years in accordance with new Census numbers and ensures the constitutional principle of one person, one vote.

Redistricting Committee

As a state legislature we are responsible to oversee this process. Earlier this year a redistricting committee was formed. It is made up of 19 members of the Legislature from all geographic areas of the state. Representatives from the Republican and Democratic parties were fully represented. In fact, members of the minority Democratic caucus were represented in numbers slightly higher than their percentage of seats in the legislature.

My Thoughts on the Redistricting Process

I feel that the Utah Legislature has hosted the most open, transparent and inclusive redistricting process in Utah's history. Public input was sought, welcomed and incorporated throughout the process. Legislators on the committee listened carefully to those who provided input. There many suggestions from the public that were drawn into the final versions of the maps.

Public Access

The process was fully open to the public, with dozens of public meetings at the Capitol and around the state. Legislators on the committee responded to thousands of e-mail, phone calls, and public comments. A website was created - http://www.redistrictutah.com - that allowed anyone to draw their own maps and comment on all others. Nearly 300 maps were drawn by legislators and the public, with more than 1,000 comments submitted. This created more educated citizens because - due to the website - they had first-hand experience with the challenges of drawing maps. Consequently, the comments and suggestions the committee received were higher quality and more usable than at any other point in our state's history. The committee even selected a citizen-drawn map for the State School Board!

The Results – Utah Senate and House:

In the Utah Senate two east-bench districts currently held by Democrats were combined (due to the lack of population growth) and a new district was created in Utah County (due to high population growth). In the Utah House of Representatives, some Democratic-leaning districts were combined. Several Republican districts – even more in number than the Democrat districts - were also combined. The House of Representatives map passed 74-1, showing strong bi-partisan support. The Senate map also passed with approval from both parties, with only one dissenting vote.

The Results – U.S. Congress:

The U.S. Congressional map has been more of a political lightning rod and the debate has attracted many critics. We are doing what we can to ensure the process is above reproach and that the maps we draw are openly discussed and fair. Unfortunately, I expect continued opposition no matter what we do. Utah is one of the most conservative states in the nation, and I feel that the final congressional map will likely reflect that reality as we follow the principle of One Person One Vote.

Principle: One-Person One Vote

While there are many important factors to consider in the redistricting process, the most important aspect is the principle known as one-person, one-vote. We have done everything humanly possible to draw districts that honor that principle. We are adhering to decades of legal precedent to ensure the work done by the committee protects citizen rights and is as insulated as possible from a legitimate legal challenge.

Potential Lawsuit Threat

The threats of lawsuits started long before the first map was proposed. It appears that opponents to the constitutional process hope to achieve by the legal process what they could not gain by the vote of the people or their elected representatives. I will keep you informed if any legal challenge is filed.

Working Together To Be Fair

While I am proud of the results so far, it was the process and citizen involvement in it that process that makes me the most proud. Your input into the map drawing process has been invaluable. The process is too big and too complicated for any one person alone. Many hands have made lighter work and have delivered outstanding results! I also want to thank the Redistricting Committee who have spent countless hours travelling and holding meetings throughout the state to hear and incorporate your feedback.

Final Steps:

Obviously, three of the four maps we need to pass are complete (School Board, House and Senate). The next few weeks will focus on our U.S. Congressional districts. Watch for a Redistricting Committee hearing on Friday, October 7th and a debate of the full Utah Senate starting Monday, October 17th. Please take some time to visit www.RedistrictUtah.com and leave your feedback on our collection of proposed congressional maps. You can also Email me any time with comments or questions.

Thanks for taking the time to read this and for your support of this process!

Sincerely,

Senator Aaron Osmond

OPINION: Senator Casey Anderson: The redistricting process is working

OPINION EDITORIAL: The following is an opinion editorial submitted by Senator Casey Anderson. The opinions stated in this article are solely his own and not those of St. George News.

On Tuesday, October 5, the Senate and House voted to adjourn until October 17 in order to allow additional public feedback and time to iron out wrinkles with potential U.S. Congressional maps.

On Monday, October 4, the Senate voted overwhelmingly to pass the Committee Adopted Base Map that has worked its way through the committee process over the last several months. Senator Christianson and I were the only two Republicans to vote against the map. Although the rest of the districts were drawn reasonably well, I felt that the 2nd district, of which we are a part, needed some adjustments in order to give Southern Utah better representation.

Despite drawing the very map that the Senate voted to adopt, the House was unable to come to a consensus and instead proposed a new map that was somewhat similar. The Senate decided that, although similar, the map showed too many significant changes to be considered "modified" and should not be adopted without additional time for public feedback. This is how the redistricting process is supposed to work and the people of Utah are being represented well by their elected officials, Republican or Democrat.

Elected officials are held accountable by the voters in their districts and are subsequently best suited for these responsibilities. As a recent Ford commercial highlighted, "Nothing good ever came from a committee." As we have seen in many other areas of government, appointed committees are often just shills for elected officials who do not want to bear the burden of responsibility and can pass off blame to a committee that is unelected. Yet the politicians still control the power because the committee members are appointed based on their support of the agenda of the politician who is appointing them. Essentially, instead of 75 House members and 29 Senate members all having a voice, the individuals who appoint the committee have all the authority.

When the Senate and House voted to adjourn until October 17, the media attempted to portray this event as being caused by a divided majority party that is infighting over a power grab.

The truth is that the House and Senate voted to adjourn in order to obtain more public feedback on more recently submitted maps that may be considered. Elected officials have fought diligently to make sure that the interests of their constituents are being represented and, when you have 75 members of the House and 29 members of the Senate who are each working hard for their areas, you are bound to take longer than anticipated and have vibrant discussions.

There are certainly a few things I would change with the process; but, all things considered, Utah has the best redistricting process in the nation and the citizens of Utah have been given an unprecedented opportunity to make a difference for our state.

Representatives have tried their very best to keep communities of interest together, maintain strong representation for their areas, keep deviations low in order to protect tax-payers from litigation and, most importantly, to draw lines that make sense to everybody.

However difficult this process may appear here in Utah, compared to other states, we are clearly the best-managed state in more ways than one.

Governor Signs Final Special Session Bills

SALT LAKE CITY—Governor Gary R. Herbert signed the remaining pieces of legislation from the recent special legislative session. The bills signed were:

S.B. 3001s03 Utah State Senate Boundaries and Election Designation (Sen. Okerlund)

S.B. 3002s19 Congressional Boundaries Designation (Sen. Okerlund)

S.B. 3005 Lieutenant Governor District Determinations (Sen. Okerlund)

Governor Herbert issued the following statement regarding Utah's redistricting effort:
"Redistricting is an emotional and complex issue. For more than six months, the State Legislature engaged members of the public in an unprecedented way. I find that the Legislature followed the law, and the outcome, although not entirely satisfactory to everyone, is reasonable. Let us remember, in the final analysis, our representatives are not chosen by lines drawn on a map; they are elected by the people of Utah."

Subject: Redistricting letter home

Senators,

Here is a template for a letter to constituents about the final redistricting session.

Dawn

After a very long Monday, we finally passed Utah's Congressional map. It was the 19th substitute of the original map that the committee recommended two weeks ago. The title of the final map was "Congressional Boundaries Designation by Representative Ipson" (SB3002 S19).The House passed it 50-19 and the Senate vote was 20-5. That final map was a close variation to what was posted on-line on September 27th.

One of the great concerns of the Senate was that we pass a map that had been vetted by the committee and had been available for public comment. When the House presented an entirely new map on Monday, we were concerned and reiterated to them that we were only interested in considering variations of the map that had been previously presented.

The final map that was passed had the following adjustments from the original map recommended two weeks ago by the Redistricting Committee:

* Kept Holladay whole--as per multiple legislative and citizen requests;
* Mill Creek was kept mostly whole--as per citizen requests;
* Salt Lake City was kept as whole as possible;
* Some rural area was added to the original portion of District 4--as per the Governor's request.

Also, I would like to point out that 24 of the 29 counties were kept whole. Remember, the redistricting process is driven entirely by numbers, so densely populated areas are the places where divisions need to be made and therefore the 5 highly populated counties have dividing lines that may be uncomfortable.

Utah's 2011 redistricting process was landmark in many ways. The process was more open than anyone would have ever imagined it could have been, even a few years ago. There were dozens of public meetings all over the state. Legislators responded to thousands of constituent comments, concerns, phone calls and Emails. The website www.redisttictutah.com was created allowing anyone to draw a map and to comment on any of the proposed maps. Nearly 300 maps were submitted and over 1,000 comments were given. Hundreds, if not thousands of adjustments were made based on citizen concerns and recommendations.

One of the maps submitted by a citizen, the state school board map, was selected by both bodies as the final map. The maps selected for the Utah House of Representatives and the Senate showed a strong bipartisan effort. Each map received a single dissenting vote.

The process may not be perfect, but it is the most open, inclusive redistricting process in the history of our state and possibly in the history of our nation.

This final map, the Congressional map, created anxiety even before the beginning of the redistricting process. The threats of lawsuits started months before the first map was even proposed, by people who hope that judicial fiat will garner their personal wishes, rather than accepting the reflected reality of the majorities' elected representatives.

The "sky is falling" mentality being loudly proclaimed by so many is interesting. As Senator Hillyard pointed out, the last time redistricting was done, the same people claimed that Representative Matheson would lose his seat because of the way the lines were drawn, but that obviously did not happen. People are not stupid. They vote for the candidate who they believe will best represent them. It is a bit insulting to imply that the citizens of Utah are too stupid to be able to figure out the good and bad each candidate has to offer and will only vote how their neighbors have voted in the past or for a political party regardless of its candidate's qualifications. I think that overall, regardless of what the press is portraying, people trust the legislative process in the creation of the maps. This was made very apparent by the fact that despite widespread publicity of the event, a rally planned for Monday at the Capitol to show disapproval of the process, was only attended by about two dozen people.

I am concerned about the pending lawsuit in terms of economic costs to the taxpayers. Litigation is not cheap. This map doesn't make everyone happy. Maybe it doesn't make anyone happy. No one person or group got everything they wanted. Most people, however, got elements of what they wanted. I think it is disingenuous to require the citizens of Utah to fund a lawsuit for one group of people who have to make the same sort of compromises that everyone else does.

As Senator Okerlund said, "In the end, this is a compromise. We made hundreds of changes as a result of public comments made around the state. It was not disregarded."

I want to thank all of you who did participate with me in this process. Thank you for your advice and suggestions. Your voice helped build better maps.

If you would like to see the final version of the maps we submitted to the Governor, or look at any of the maps that were submitted you can do that at www.redistrictutah.com.

As always, I would love to talk with you about this or any other issues.

Re: GRAMA Request

Dear Mr. Fellows,

It has come to our attention that Democratic members of the Redistricting Committee may have engaged in improper and possibly illegal activities involving the use of partisan data in constructing redistricting maps.

As you know, the 2011 Redistricting Procedural Guidelines prohibits political data from entering the State computer systems, and also requires that the use of staff time and redistricting resources be first cleared by a member of the Committee.

Based upon information and belief, individuals affiliated with the State Democratic Party have attempted to circumvent these rules -- and the GRAMA statute itself -- by various inappropriate methods, including, but not limited to, exchanging partisan data through non-governmental email systems, sharing data via text message to personal and government cell phones, and using partisan data in the map room.

Therefore, pursuant to the rights guaranteed under the Government Records Access and Management Act, we request the following documents from the Utah State Legislature.

- All SMS messages sent and received by Sen. Gene Davis, Gene Davis, Ben McAdams, Ross Romero on their state-issued cellular phones, and all redistricting-related messages on their personal cellular devices between September 1, 2011 and October 12, 2011.

- All email to and from Sen. Gene Davis, Ben McAdams, Ross Romero and the internet history on their computers between September 1, 2011 and October 12, 2011.

- All communications and records of access to the map room involving Todd Taylor, David Irvine, Maryann Martindale, Glen Wright, Jim Dabakis, Peter Corroon, Gene Davis, Ben McAdams, Ross Romero and Alyson Heyrend.

- All email sent and received by Rep. Brian King between September 1, 2011 and October 12, 2011.

- All cellular phone records of Rep. Brian King between September 1, 2011 and October 12, 2011.

As the State Republican Party Chairman, this request is made on behalf of Republicans living in the State of Utah, so we therefore ask for your response within five business days pursuant to state law.

Sincerely,

Thomas Wright

Here is a little supplemental perspective on Chris Vanocur's ridiculous report: (Link) EXCLUSIVE: Oops! Redistricting legislators split homes in half

* Legislatures use U.S. Census blocks for redistricting.

* Census block boundary lines don't always adhere to actual lines on the ground. Sometimes those boundaries run through houses.

* SB 3005 which we passed unanimously hours prior to the congressional map provides a fix.

* SB 3005 gives the Lt. Governor the authority to compare the U.S. Census map lines to state maps based on aerial photography (more accurate) along with other relevant data, and determine which congressional district each home lies. Local officials will conduct elections based on the LG's determination.

* The KTVX report seemed to ignore objective reporting of the facts in favor of partisan ridicule and partisan messaging.

Government Operations and Political Subdivisions

Definition of Countywide Services

Received a request from the Utah Association of Counties (UAC) for statutory clarification on which public services constitute countywide services. The Committee requested that UAC and the League of Cities and Towns prepare separate lists of public services that counties and cities should provide and present them in the October meeting.

Draft Legislation, "Election Law Amendments"

Discussed draft legislation, "Election Law Amendments," which makes several technical changes to the state's election law. The Committee requested additional drafting changes and directed that they be prepared for the October meeting.

Draft Legislation, "Voter Information Pamphlets"

Discussed draft legislation, "Voter Information Pamphlets," which makes mailing a voter information pamphlet optional in certain circumstances, and authorizes a notice of the website on which a voter information pamphlet is published and the phone number to call to request a voter information pamphlet by mail. The Committee requested that voter information pamphlet deadlines be added to the draft for discussion at a future meeting.

State Agency Consolidation

Received an update from a legislator on efforts to prepare legislation to consolidate the functions of several departments of state government.

Chairs: Sen. Peter C. Knudson / Rep. Kraig Powell / Rep. R. Curt Webb
Staff: Art L. Hunsaker (Policy Analyst) / Joseph T. Wade (Policy Analyst) / Victoria Ashby (Attorney) / Emily R. Brown (Attorney) / Wendy Bangerter (Secretary)

Health and Human Services

Prescription Drug Abuse

Received a report from the Utah Department of Health on the Drug Overdose Mortality Survey. The report stated that the reduction in prescription drug overdose deaths has been the result of a media campaign, increased prescriber education, the development of prescribing guidelines, and research. The Committee also received reports from the Utah Pharmaceutical Drug Crime Project and the Utah Commission on Criminal and Juvenile Justice.

What do you need from us at this meeting for redistricting? We will be there to answer general questions of course, but do we need to bring machines/projectors over to show/draw plans? We can do that if it's useful, but need a bit of lead time (we are already planning to have machines in caucus Wednesday). Just let me know. Thanks

We live in a digital age and world. Who even uses paper when you have an iPad you can carry around with you? It seems only fitting that the Utah Legislature would follow suit. For as long as any of us can remember, paper Bills enact statute. Paper Bills are passed and signed. However, for the first time in Utah, and possibly the first time in the Country, the Utah State Legislature is actually passing an electronic component of the Bill.

Redistricting occurs every ten years and in an effort to provide better access and details at such a crazy time, the Bills will contain both a paper and digital component. The state of Utah is split into 115,000 census blocks. Through this new innovative technology these blocks are listed and then assigned to a district. This has been extremely beneficial to both the public and the Legislature.

Although every traditional Bill has been posted online for the public, this new technology allows the public to view the redistricting maps in much greater detail. This is because each and every census block can be viewed. You can literally zoom in until you see only one census block – whether it's a city block in Salt Lake City or a railroad in Panguitch. As long as you have access to internet, you are able to view the maps in as great of detail as you choose. However, even if you don't have access to the internet, the maps are available on computers inside the Capitol.

Not only is this new technology an example of how innovative our State Legislature is becoming, it also shows how important public involvement is regarding redistricting. Public involvement and knowledge is key in the passing of these Bills. It is clear that the State is making public access of utmost importance.

Remember "Fair Boundaries" - the nonpartisan, organic, citizen group that says they want redistricting done independent of political influence? Guess who drew their map.

Exclusive: Democratic Official Drew 'Nonpartisan' Redistricting Maps

By Bob Bernick, UtahPolicy.com Contributing Editor

Longtime Utah State Democratic Party official Todd Taylor drew the legislative and congressional redistricting maps submitted to the Legislatures Redistricting Committee by the citizen group Fair Boundaries, UtahPolicy learned Tuesday.

Glenn Wright, head of Fair Boundaries, confirmed that Taylor, who was the partys state executive director more than 15 years until this summer when he took on a new paid party position, drew the Fair Boundaries maps.

Wright said their maps were not biased in favor of Democrats, adding that incumbents home addresses were not taken into account, nor were any voting patterns of would-be district citizens.

You can see the Fair Boundaries and other entries at the states redistricting web site: www.redistrictutah.com. The groups U.S. House map is here. Its Utah House plan is here. The groups state Senate map is here.

Wright, who in 2010 was the Democratic candidate for House District 53, (he lives in the Park City area), told UtahPolicy that he believes the Fair Boundary maps are fair and should be considered as viable alternatives to the state Senate and House maps already approved by the Redistricting Committee.

The committee has also adopted a State School Board map and will recommend a four-seat U.S. House redistricting map before lawmakers meet Oct. 3 in special session to formally adopt districts that congressional, legislative and school board members will be elected from for the next 10 years.

Ours are (politically) unbiased maps, said Wright.

However, when Wright and other supporters of the citizen-drawn maps presented their outlines to the Legislatures Redistricting Committee, they did not say that Taylor drew the maps. The clear impression was that members of the volunteer Fair Boundaries group drew the maps.

Senate President Michael Waddoups, R-Taylorsville, a member of the Redistricting Committee, told UtahPolicy Tuesday night: Im disappointed in the deception that Fair Boundaries drew their maps when they didnt.

And Im sorry for Fair Boundaries members who were snookered into something - I doubt they knew that their maps were drawn by the past (executive director) of the Democratic Party.

Taylor initially declined comment to UtahPolicy Tuesday afternoon, suggesting that Wright be contacted. After Wright was interviewed, Taylor responded to UtahPolicy questions.

Wright said Fair Boundaries -- a citizens group that failed to gather enough voter signatures to get on the 2010 general election ballot a new law that would have set up a citizen redistricting commission to make recommendations to the Legislature on the 2011 redrawings -- decided to use Taylor for several reasons.

First, said Wright, Taylor has a wealth of knowledge about redistricting, having been the Democrats lead man in the 1991 and 2001 redistricting efforts.

Second, the state Democratic Partys redistricting software was much easier to use than the online citizen-accessible program at www.redistrictutah.com.

For one thing, our software provides metrics that we find very useful and important, said Wright.

In presenting their state Senate and House redistricting proposals, for example, Fair Boundary folks listed how many times cities and counties were split by their maps, the total miles of boundaries (indicating how compact their districts were) and other measurements.

Wright at one point asked committee members and their staff if the states software could provide the same numbers on the committee-generated maps. It was unclear if the same measurements could be made.

Our software cost $5,000, said Wright on Tuesday. Theirs cost something like $80,000. Im sure it could do it if they wanted to.

Taylor said the same thing, adding that he would be glad to provide those metrics on the committee maps if state legislative staffers couldnt.

They are important metrics, said Taylor, who agreed with Wright that his maps did not take into account any voting patterns or partisan information and didnt consider where incumbent legislators lived.

Basically, I read Fair Boundaries initiative and their goals and followed that outline in drafting the maps for the citizen group, said Taylor.

Unlike 10 years ago, the state Democratic Party itself is not going to suggest any redistricting maps this year, said Taylor, because we dont think it will be helpful.

Hearing of Taylors involvement in the Fair Boundaries map-making, GOP legislative leaders immediately called foul - adding that they dont know how seriously they can take the Fair Boundary maps knowing they were drawn by a state Democratic Party paid employee.

I have no problem with the Democratic Party drawing maps, and they should, but be honest about it, said Waddoups.

Even with this deception, Waddoups said the committee would continue to examine the Fair Boundary maps. Weve already gotten some good ideas out of their maps. But (Fair Boundaries) shouldnt have represented that they were their maps when in fact they were not.

Taylor said he was not paid to draw the maps, he did those for free, in part, as an intellectual exercise to see how close he could draw maps that kept cities and communities of interest together while having the smallest population variances.

Fair Boundaries Senate map is amazing in one respect, according to the states web site it has 0.00 percent variance. In other words, as a whole the 29 districts are exactly the same in population down to the one-hundredth percentile.

The committees own guideline is that no Senate or House district can be greater or lesser than 3.5 percent in population variance, although the committees own maps have smaller variances that that.

Said Taylor: I found out that you can get much more compact (districts), keep those communities together, have very low (population) variances than anything Ive seen coming out of the Redistricting Committees own work.

At the very least, said Taylor, the Redistricting Committee should use the Fair Boundaries maps as templates, or starting points, for their own map-drawing, since, he believes, those maps start at the most fair, basic origins of keeping communities together without taking into account any political information - like putting incumbents in their own districts.

Waddoups said from what has now been learned about Fair Boundaries actions, he believes it will harm their effort at getting an initiative passed creating an unbiased and unaffiliated citizen commission.

Seeing what has happened in Idaho (where a citizen redistricting commission was challenged in court) and with this deception, that will make it even harder to say that (a citizen commission in Utah) should be done. Obviously, this (Fair Boundaries) effort was not independent. And independent was their critical word - they (Fair Boundaries) wanted an independent commission.

But as (legislators opposed to such a commission) have said, there is no such thing as an independent commission - and there was nothing independent about their (Fair Boundaries) maps.

Everyone has a point of view, as weve just learned today, said Waddoups.

Hello,

I have been asked by a staff member at the Hinckley Institute of Politics (at the University of Utah), if there is a possibility to have several members of the Redistricting Committee (staff included) to appear at a forum they are trying to plan. We are looking for about 3 members. They had mentioned sometime around the 6th of October, which of course is the week of Special Session, which I mentioned to him. They said they are willing to work around your schedule.

The forums are usually an hour long, with about 30-45 minutes dedicated to panel members speaking, and about 15-20 minutes devoted to questions from the audience.

I think this is an awesome opportunity to explain to college students (my peers) how redistricting actually works. I have become significantly more enlightened on the process due to my experience and working with each of you, and feel this forum would be beneficial to those who don't actually understand how it works.

If you are interested, please let me know via email, or you can reach me on my cell at 801.598.9999. We will try to nail down a time based on who wants to attend.

Thanks for your help!

Governor Signs Final Special Session Bills

SALT LAKE CITY—Governor Gary R. Herbert signed the remaining pieces of legislation from the recent special legislative session. The bills signed were:

S.B. 3001s03 Utah State Senate Boundaries and Election Designation (Sen. Okerlund)

S.B. 3002s19 Congressional Boundaries Designation (Sen. Okerlund)

Governor Herbert issued the following statement regarding Utah's redistricting effort:
"Redistricting is an emotional and complex issue. For more than six months, the State Legislature engaged members of the public in an unprecedented way. I find that the Legislature followed the law, and the outcome, although not entirely satisfactory to everyone, is reasonable. Let us remember, in the final analysis, our representatives are not chosen by lines drawn on a map; they are elected by the people of Utah."

Senator McAdams & Senator Okerlund,

When the dust settles (or if we have a long break), would you be willing to hold a phone or Skype conversation with Reed Rasband for a BYU Political Review article on redistricting? More info below.

CC: to Spencer who can help coordinate this. Thanks!

Ric

Ric,
On Wednesday, you told me that you would contact Senator Okerlund and Senator McAdams about when they are available to interview. I am wondering if you had a chance to do that, and if so when those times would be.

The best time to conduct the interviews will be next week (October 10-14) so that they can be printed in the October edition of the BYU Political Review. I can interview the senators via phone or Skype. This can be done together or separately; I will do whatever is easier for them. If either is unable to be interviewed I would be happy to interview a different legislator who has had strong involvement in the redistricting process. I do need to interview a member of both parties in order to comply with the BYU Political Review's nonpartisan policy in coverage.

The full transcripts of these interviews will be posted online and an excerpt will be printed in our October edition. For more information about the BYU Political Review, visit our website at BYUPR.com.

Dear Colleague--

As you know, I've had the opportunity to work on the redistricting committee the last few months. It's been a great experience. One of the best things about our efforts on the School Board, Senate and House maps was working across the aisle to put together maps that both Republicans and Democrats felt, for the most part, reflected the redistricting principles we adopted in the Spring. I'm proud of the work the committee and the legislature did on those maps and I'll stand by them against any challenge.

I think we still have a chance to do that same thing in our work on the Congressional map. I write to ask for your support of a Congressional map that I believe represents the most realistic chance of getting both bipartisan and citizen support for our work.

One of the six final maps the redistricting committee focused on was drawn by David Garber from Utah County. David's "Garber D" map was the only citizen map among the final six. I am not a fan of the idea that Utah is best served with four districts mixing urban and rural. But I recognize that support in the legislature for that approach is strong. And among the maps that went with a rural/urban mix in each district, I liked David's the best.

It needed some work to get the population numbers down to a one person deviation but I tweaked it a little bit and presented it last week at our final redistricting committee meeting. In the committee hearing, Speaker Lockhart expressed concern about Utah County being split three ways. So I went in and made a few adjustments to eliminate that problem. You can see the latest version of the Garber D map at http://www.redistrictutah.com/maps/congress-rep-king-garber-modified-king.

Here's what I like about this map. First, it splits no county more than two ways. Salt Lake, Utah and Davis counties are each split twice. Every other county is kept whole. We had to split about 21,000 folks from Davis county to make the numbers for District 1 work. The Utah County split is along I-15 through Lehi and American Fork in a way that is very similar to the base map that the committee adopted. In the South part of Utah county we tried to minimize splits of municipalities. The only city South of American Fork that is split is Salem. In Salt Lake county we worked to make the dividing lines between district 2 and the new district 4 as clean as possible. In the North part of the county we followed Redwood road down to I-215 and then moved over to 1300 West until we got to Riverton where the line moves over to I-15.

The map ends up with four urban/rural districts that have a population deviation of one person and are more compact than any other maps that have a chance of passing. But perhaps the best thing about it is that I think it doesn't come from any one of us in the legislature. It's a citizen map that I really believe makes sense. It's also a compromise between what partisan Democrats and Republicans want as their dream product. Finally, passing this map will restore the credibility and good will that we built up with the public when we created and passed the House, Senate and School Board maps but that have been damaged in the last couple of weeks.

I'd be happy to address questions or concerns you have about this map. And I would appreciate your serious consideration of it as we approach Monday and get together to continue our redistricting work.

DOJ Redistricting Point Man: No Magic Formula

By Shira Toeplitz and Joshua Miller
Roll Call Staff
Oct. 11, 2011, Midnight

Bill Clark/CQ Roll Call

Assistant Attorney General Thomas Perez plays gatekeeper to some of the most contentious Congressional maps and holds the keys to Members' political futures.

He oversees the Department of Justice's Civil Rights Division, where racial discrimination and voting rights issues play out prominently in a redistricting cycle. What makes Perez's role particularly unique: He is in charge during the first Democratic administration to monitor redistricting since Congress passed the Voting Rights Act 46 years ago.

In Perez's two years leading one of the most controversial departments in the administration, the bureaucrat has already attracted ire from many Members. In a wide-ranging interview, Perez stressed to Roll Call that his department is supposed to be apolitical in its enforcement of the Voting Rights Act and even called his own work educating state lawmakers on the process "heroic."

But in an environment where House Republicans are hunting for any ammunition they can use against Attorney General Eric Holder's Justice Department, the process can quickly become politically charged.

Perez's division has become one of the GOP's most prominent targets as the division considers new voting laws passed by GOP-controlled state legislatures and hires dozens of new career civil rights attorneys who Republicans charge are too liberal.

"One of my principal goals in coming here, not only in the voting section, but across the board, is to make sure that politics doesn't infect the decision-making process," Perez told Roll Call last week. "Now, when we make decisions, do they affect how elections are carried out? Undeniably, because that's what the Voting Rights Act is about."

The Voting Rights Act empowers the Justice Department to approve or challenge changes to voting laws, including Congressional maps, in several key political states such as Texas, Virginia and Arizona. Under Section 5, several states with a history of discrimination must get preclearance before their new Congressional maps take effect this year.

Preclearance is a deeply complicated process, and Perez noted several factors go into his division's analysis and decisions. Certain House districts must have a combination of the right minority voting age population, turnout performance, candidate crossover appeal and racial community cohesion.

"There's no magic numerical formula. It's a very holistic analysis that involves looking at prior elections, voting age data, things of that matter," Perez said. "We're trying to demystify the process."

In that effort, Perez took the unprecedented step of addressing both chambers of the Louisiana Legislature about redistricting. It might not be a coincidence, he suggested, that the Department of Justice approved the Louisiana map on its first preclearance attempt — unprecedented in the Bayou State's history.

The Louisiana meeting is one of several outreach efforts Perez said he's made with state leaders, including Texas'. It's part of his self-described "aggressive" and "heroic efforts to educate people about the do's and don'ts of redistricting."

But the preclearance process remains one of the department's toughest duties. It's one reason 33 House Members voted against reauthorizing the Voting Rights Act in 2006. The effort was passed by a Republican Congress and signed by Republican President George W. Bush. Still, the testy politics of race and voting is why a handful of states led by Republicans asked the federal courts to rule on preclearance for their maps instead of Perez's department.

Rep. Trent Franks (R-Ariz.), chairman of a House Judiciary subcommittee that oversees federal civil rights and who voted against the VRA reauthorization, said it's "ludicrous" his state still has to endure the burden of preclearance.

"I think it's obviously insulting to us," Franks said. "Our record on civil rights is today and in the past is far better than some of the other states."

But Perez pointedly said that, "We've come a long way in the road to equal opportunity, but as Congress itself noted, discrimination persists."

Perez spoke to Roll Call in his office, which sits behind a large conference room that once housed former FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover's workspace. His path to his current position followed a circuitous route around the Beltway.

Born to immigrant parents from the Dominican Republic, Perez is a graduate of Harvard Law School. He began working for the Department of Justice in 1986 and eventually became a deputy to Attorney General Janet Reno in the Civil Rights Division.

In the mid-1990s, Perez worked in the office of Sen. Edward Kennedy (D-Mass.). Two Kennedy photos are prominently placed on his office wall, including one black-and-white snapshot of Perez with the late Senator.

"It was any civil rights lawyer's dream job," he said. "The most iconic figure in United States Senate history for civil rights, and you have the opportunity to work for him."

Perez then made the unusual jump from a federal position to local government.

In 2002, Perez ran in the Democratic primary for Montgomery County Council against three opponents. One of them, Sally Sternbach — a Silver Spring, Md., activist — told Roll Call that in a field of three white women and one Latino man, Perez's life story stood out.

With the support of organized labor, Perez won easily with 44 percent in the primary and breezed through the general election to become the council's first Hispanic member.

Sternbach said that even nine years ago, it was clear Perez had his eye on higher office. "This was a stepping stone for him," she said. "His ultimate goal was federal. And he'll run for Congress at some point."

Toward the end of Perez's tenure on the council, political operatives such as Ike Leggett, then the chairman of the Maryland Democratic Party, encouraged him to look statewide. Leggett told Roll Call that there was a push from people like him to convince Perez that "there are bigger places and bigger venues that you need to be a part of."

In 2006, Perez did move toward higher office, running for Maryland attorney general. But his bid was thwarted by the state's Court of Appeals, which ruled he didn't meet the eligibility requirements because he had not practiced law in the state for a decade.

That didn't keep Perez from a statewide position for long. He served as Maryland's secretary of labor, licensing and regulation from 2007 to 2009.

Perez explained that his municipal résumé is a boon to his current position. "Frankly, it makes me a better fed to have worked in state and local government because I have a very acute appreciation of the challenges" that they face, Perez said.

Perez turned 50 on Friday, which means there's likely space for a few more lines on his résumé before his career ends.

Asked about a potential return to elective office, Perez deftly dodged the question: "I've loved every job I've ever had. I am a firm believer in knowing what's right for me at any given time."

DRAFT

Dear Constituent:

I hope all is well. We've been busy at the Legislature this summer dealing with issues important to you. But perhaps none is as important as the once-in-a-decade redistricting process.

Redistricting is the redrawing of political district maps. It happens every 10 years in accordance with new Census numbers and ensures the principle of one man, one vote.

I'm proud to say that it has been the most open, transparent and inclusive redistricting process in history. Public input was sought after, welcomed and used. Legislators listened to those who provided input and many suggestions from the public were incorporated into the final versions of the maps.

Our redistricting committee was made up of 19 members from all geographic areas of the state, and overrepresented Democrats in the Legislature. The process was as fair and open as possible, with dozens of open meetings.

Committee members have fielded thousands of e-mails and phone calls. An unprecedented public website has been launched -- -- that allows anyone to draw their own maps and comment on others. There were aptly named donut holes, pizza slices, layered cakes and hats with stripes. There were nearly 300 maps drawn by legislators and the public, with more than 1,000 comments written about them. The base map for the State School Board is even a citizen drawn map.

In the Utah House of Representatives map, some Democratic-leaning districts were combined. Conversely, some Republican districts - more than the Democrat districts -- were combined. Friends from the same side of the aisle will have to run against each other or choose not to run, because in the end, the numbers reign supreme. Equal representation demands that district boundaries will shift to where the people have chosen to live.

Lawsuit Threat:

The many threats of lawsuits started long before the redistricting process began. Democrats have sought to gerrymander their way to seats they could not win by elections. When we didn't capitulate, they signaled they would be filing expensive lawsuits challenging our constitutional duty to draw these maps, before the maps had even been voted on.

We believe that our maps are absolutely defensible. We have abided by decades of legal precedent to ensure the maps cannot be overturned. The most important aspect of redistricting is one-man, one-vote. We've have done everything humanly possible to make the districts the same size, whether in the Utah House and Senate, or the U.S. House of Representatives. The latter map has a deviation of zero. Which is to say that all districts have the same number of people, except for one district that has a spare because the state has an odd number of people.

Working together to be fair:

The House of Representatives map passed 74-1, showing strong bi-partisan support. While the congressional map faced much stronger opposition from the Democratic party, I believe the map was fairly drawn.

It includes a mix of rural and urban areas. With such a small delegation, it's important that they all have a vested interest in statewide issues.

It also represents the political leanings of the state. Utah is one of the most conservative states in the nation, and the map reflects that.

While I am proud of the results, it is perhaps the process and your involvement in it that makes me the most proud. Your input into the map drawing process has been invaluable. The process is too big and too complicated for any one person to do by themselves. Many hands have made lighter work and has delivered outstanding results.

Thank you.

DRAFT

Dear Constituent:

I hope all is well. We've been busy at the Legislature this summer dealing with issues important to you. But perhaps none is as important as the once-in-a-decade redistricting process.

Redistricting is the redrawing of political district maps. It happens every 10 years in accordance with new Census numbers and ensures the principle of one man, one vote.

I'm proud to say that it has been the most open, transparent and inclusive redistricting process in Utah's history. Public input was sought after, welcomed and used throughout the process. Legislators listened to those who provided input and many suggestions from the public were incorporated into the final versions of the maps.

Our redistricting committee was made up of 19 members from all geographic areas of the state, and in fact, overrepresented Democrats in the Legislature. The process was as fair and open as possible, with dozens of open meetings.

Committee members have fielded thousands of e-mails and phone calls. An unprecedented public website has been launched -- -- that allows anyone to draw their own maps and comment on others. Nearly 300 maps were drawn by legislators and the public, with more than 1,000 comments submitted. The base map for the State School Board was even a citizen-drawn map.

In the Utah House of Representatives map, some Democratic-leaning districts were combined. Conversely, some Republican districts - more than the Democrat districts -- were combined. Friends from the same side of the aisle will have to run against each other or choose not to run, because in the end, the numbers reign supreme. Equal representation demands that district boundaries will shift to where the people have chosen to live.

Lawsuit Threat:

The many threats of lawsuits started long before the redistricting process began. Opponents to the constitutional process have sought to achieve by judicial fiat what could not be gained by the vote of the people and their elected representatives.

We have abided by decades of legal precedent to ensure the work done by the committee remains insulated to legal challenge. While there are many important factors to consider in the redistricting process, the most important aspect of redistricting is the principle known as "one-person, one-vote." We have done everything humanly possible to draw districts that honor that principle, whether in the Utah House and Senate, or the U.S. House of Representatives.

Working together to be fair:

The House of Representatives map passed 74-1, showing strong bi-partisan support. While the congressional map faced some opposition, I believe the map was fairly drawn.

It includes a mix of rural and urban areas. With such a small delegation, it's important that they all have a vested interest in statewide issues.

It also represents the political leanings of the state. Utah is one of the most conservative states in the nation, and the map reflects reality.

While I am proud of the results, it is perhaps the process and your involvement in it that makes me the most proud. Your input into the map drawing process has been invaluable. The process is too big and too complicated for any one person alone. Many hands have made lighter work and have delivered outstanding results.

Thank you.

Subject: Redistricting letter home

Senators,

Here is a template for a letter to constituents about the final redistricting session.

Dawn

After a very long Monday, we finally passed Utah's Congressional map. It was the 19th substitute of the original map that the committee recommended two weeks ago. The title of the final map was "Congressional Boundaries Designation by Representative Ipson" (SB3002 S19).The House passed it 50-19 and the Senate vote was 20-5. That final map was a close variation to what was posted on-line on September 27th.

One of the great concerns of the Senate was that we pass a map that had been vetted by the committee and had been available for public comment. When the House presented an entirely new map on Monday, we were concerned and reiterated to them that we were only interested in considering variations of the map that had been previously presented.

The final map that was passed had the following adjustments from the original map recommended two weeks ago by the Redistricting Committee:

- Kept Holladay whole—as per multiple legislative and citizen requests;
- Mill Creek was kept mostly whole—as per citizen requests;
- Salt Lake City was kept as whole as possible;
- Some rural area was added to the original portion of District 4—as per the Governor's request.

Also, I would like to point out that 24 of the 29 counties were kept whole. Remember, the redistricting process is driven entirely by numbers, so densely populated areas are the places where divisions need to be made and therefore the 5 highly populated counties have dividing lines that may be uncomfortable.

Utah's 2011 redistricting process was landmark in many ways. The process was more open than anyone would have ever imagined it could have been, even a few years ago. There were dozens of public meetings all over the state. Legislators responded to thousands of constituent comments, concerns, phone calls and Emails. The website www.redisttictutah.com was created allowing anyone to draw a map and to comment on any of the proposed maps. Nearly 300 maps were submitted and over 1,000 comments were given. Hundreds, if not thousands of adjustments were made based on citizen concerns and recommendations.

One of the maps submitted by a citizen, the state school board map, was selected by both bodies as the final map. The maps selected for the Utah House of Representatives and the Senate showed a strong bipartisan effort. Each map received a single dissenting vote.

The process may not be perfect, but it is the most open, inclusive redistricting process in the history of our state and possibly in the history of our nation.

This final map, the Congressional map, created anxiety even before the beginning of the redistricting process. The threats of lawsuits started months before the first map was even proposed, by people who hope that judicial fiat will garner their personal wishes, rather than accepting the reflected reality of the majorities' elected representatives.

The "sky is falling" mentality being loudly proclaimed by so many is interesting. As Senator Hillyard pointed out, the last time redistricting was done, the same people claimed that Representative Matheson would lose his seat because of the way the lines were drawn, but that obviously did not happen. People are not stupid. They vote for the candidate who they believe will best represent them. It is a bit insulting to imply that the citizens of Utah are too stupid to be able to figure out the good and bad each candidate has to offer and will only vote how their neighbors have voted in the past or for a political party regardless of its candidate's qualifications. I think that overall, regardless of what the press is portraying, people trust the legislative process in the creation of the maps. This was made very apparent by the fact that despite widespread publicity of the event, a rally planned for Monday at the Capitol to show disapproval of the process, was only attended by about two dozen people.

I am concerned about the pending lawsuit in terms of economic costs to the taxpayers. Litigation is not cheap. This map doesn't make everyone happy. Maybe it doesn't make anyone happy. No one person or group got everything they wanted. Most people, however, got elements of what they wanted. I think it is disingenuous to require the citizens of Utah to fund a lawsuit for one group of people who have to make the same sort of compromises that everyone else does.

As Senator Okerlund said, "In the end, this is a compromise. We made hundreds of changes as a result of public comments made around the state. It was not disregarded."

I want to thank all of you who did participate with me in this process. Thank you for your advice and suggestions. Your voice helped build better maps.

If you would like to see the final version of the maps we submitted to the Governor, or look at any of the maps that were submitted you can do that at www.redistrictutah.com .

As always, I would love to talk with you about this or any other issues.

Talking points for Committee Adopted Congressional Map:

* The map's deviation would have been zero, except for the woman in District 3 who didn't know she was having twins until after she had reported to the Census. That district will have one additional citizen.

* Utah's new 4th district is located in the very area responsible for the addition of the new seat. (South Salt Lake County and north Utah County.)

* All four districts contain rural-urban mixes, including the new 4th district. The west side of Utah County has a significant percentage of its land under the control of the federal Bureau of Land Management. That part of the county is also home to one of the largest agricultural zone in the state.

* We cannot pass maps based on Republican/Democrat percentages. The courts would throw the maps out if we did that. These maps reflect the policies of the redistricting committee that follow rules established by decades of court precedent.

* Rep. Matheson should appreciate the work we did. We kept Salt Lake City whole, and he still has many of the rural areas that constituted his base over the past 10 years.

* It was noted by Lee Davidson at the Trib that all four of Jim's opponents live outside the proposed districts. Also, we left a number of declared conservatives in District 3, which is occupied by Jason Chaffetz. So it turns out we screwed everyone. Why your focus on Jim? You guys (media) have a particular thing for Democrats?

* Yes, Salt Lake County was split in three. Utah and Davis counties had hunks carved off, as well.

Re: GRAMA Request

Dear Mr. Fellows,

It has come to our attention that Democratic members of the Redistricting Committee may have engaged in improper and possibly illegal activities involving the use of partisan data in constructing redistricting maps.

As you know, the 2011 Redistricting Procedural Guidelines prohibits political data from entering the State computer systems, and also requires that the use of staff time and redistricting resources be first cleared by a member of the Committee.

Based upon information and belief, individuals affiliated with the State Democratic Party have attempted to circumvent these rules -- and the GRAMA statute itself -- by various inappropriate methods, including, but not limited to, exchanging partisan data through non-governmental email systems, sharing data via text message to personal and government cell phones, and using partisan data in the map room.

Therefore, pursuant to the rights guaranteed under the Government Records Access and Management Act, we request the following documents from the Utah State Legislature.

- All SMS messages sent and received by Sen. Gene Davis, Gene Davis, Ben McAdams, Ross Romero on their state-issued cellular phones, and all redistricting-related messages on their personal cellular devices between September 1, 2011 and October 12, 2011.

- All email to and from Sen. Gene Davis, Ben McAdams, Ross Romero and the internet history on their computers between September 1, 2011 and October 12, 2011.

- All communications and records of access to the map room involving Todd Taylor, David Irvine, Maryann Martindale, Glen Wright, Jim Dabakis, Peter Corroon, Gene Davis, Ben McAdams, Ross Romero and Alyson Heyrend.

- All email sent and received by Rep. Brian King between September 1, 2011 and October 12, 2011.

- All cellular phone records of Rep. Brian King between September 1, 2011 and October 12, 2011.

As the State Republican Party Chairman, this request is made on behalf of Republicans living in the State of Utah, so we therefore ask for your response within five business days pursuant to state law.

Sincerely,

Thomas Wright
Utah State Republican Party Chairman

Senators and Staff:

This is a reminder for the 2 GRAMA requests received by the Senate (I have attached them again for your information).

Some of you have already sent me your information but please check the requirements listed below to make sure that you have sent all the information you have in your possession.

The first request is from the Utah State Democratic Party requiring: All communications in the past 30 days (up to October 12) please note that "all" communications would include: written correspondence, emails -in your SENT, RECEIVED and TRASH folders, texts, voice-mails, and instant messages (regardless of whether they are on state or personal accounts) that contain, reference, reflect, regard, consist of or include:

- Block file assignment files
- Proposed or adopted congressional, Utah House or Utah Senate maps
- Redistricting and members of the Utah State Legislature, Utah's Congressional Delegation, Utah Governor or Utah State Republican Party, including current, past, potential, and future candidates and elected officials
- Any email sent to or from the Utah or National Republican Party including its staff, advisors, and executive committee
- Partisan data and the redistricting process

The second request is from the Utah Republican Party which has clarified that they are seeking only records that relate to redistricting from the period of September 1, 2011 to October 12, 2011 in:

- All SMS messages (text messages) sent and received by Senators Gene Davis, Ben McAdams, and Ross Romero on state-issued cellular devices, and all redistricting-related messages on personal cellular devices
- All email to and from Senators Gene Davis, Ben McAdams, and Ross Romero
- All email sent by Rep. Brian King

(Please note again, that you need to send me what is in your TRASH folder if it relates, as well).

Tom Vaughn should be sending out instructions on retrieving text messages soon.

Please let me know as soon as possible if you need staff assistance in your search and let me know if you have a preference in having non-partisan or partisan staff or staff attorneys assist you in your search.

Also, taking into account only Census data, Fruit Heights and Farmington are slightly split. However, taking into account state data including aerial photography, parcel, and State Tax Commission data, we don't believe Farmington and Fruit Heights are split.

Senators,

Tomorrow at 2 p.m. a videographer will film stories about the redistricting process. Jeremy Roberts needs your help get people there who can speak truthfully about the unprecedented citizen partnership and how we made specific changes to the map based on careful listening to citizen input.

Quick help today will pay off for us over the next several months. Let me know, or let Jeremy Roberts know.

Thanks!

Dear Colleague--

As you know, I've had the opportunity to work on the redistricting committee the last few months. It's been a great experience. One of the best things about our efforts on the School Board, Senate and House maps was working across the aisle to put together maps that both Republicans and Democrats felt, for the most part, reflected the redistricting principles we adopted in the Spring. I'm proud of the work the committee and the legislature did on those maps and I'll stand by them against any challenge.

I think we still have a chance to do that same thing in our work on the Congressional map. I write to ask for your support of a Congressional map that I believe represents the most realistic chance of getting both bipartisan and citizen support for our work.

One of the six final maps the redistricting committee focused on was drawn by David Garber from Utah County. David's "Garber D" map was the only citizen map among the final six. I am not a fan of the idea that Utah is best served with four districts mixing urban and rural. But I recognize that support in the legislature for that approach is strong. And among the maps that went with a rural/urban mix in each district, I liked David's the best.

It needed some work to get the population numbers down to a one person deviation but I tweaked it a little bit and presented it last week at our final redistricting committee meeting. In the committee hearing, Speaker Lockhart expressed concern about Utah County being split three ways. So I went in and made a few adjustments to eliminate that problem. You can see the latest version of the Garber D map at http://www.redistrictutah.com/maps/congress-rep-king-garber-modified-king.

Here's what I like about this map. First, it splits no county more than two ways. Salt Lake, Utah and Davis counties are each split twice. Every other county is kept whole. We had to split about 21,000 folks from Davis county to make the numbers for District 1 work. The Utah County split is along I-15 through Lehi and American Fork in a way that is very similar to the base map that the committee adopted. In the South part of Utah county we tried to minimize splits of municipalities. The only city South of American Fork that is split is Salem. In Salt Lake county we worked to make the dividing lines between district 2 and the new district 4 as clean as possible. In the North part of the county we followed Redwood road down to I-215 and then moved over to 1300 West until we got to Riverton where the line moves over to I-15.

The map ends up with four urban/rural districts that have a population deviation of one person and are more compact than any other maps that have a chance of passing. But perhaps the best thing about it is that I think it doesn't come from any one of us in the legislature. It's a citizen map that I really believe makes sense. It's also a compromise between what partisan Democrats and Republicans want as their dream product. Finally, passing this map will restore the credibility and good will that we built up with the public when we created and passed the House, Senate and School Board maps but that have been damaged in the last couple of weeks.

I'd be happy to address questions or concerns you have about this map. And I would appreciate your serious consideration of it as we approach Monday and get together to continue our redistricting work.

Subject: The First Congressional Map we passed

Senators - here are talking points for the committee-approved congressional map we passed yesterday. I know we're considering other options but this may still come in handy responding to constituent Email, etc.

Ric

Committee Adopted Congressional Map:
Talking Points

* All four maps are mathematically equal (one district has one person more than the other three) as required by the US Supreme Court.

* Utah's new 4th district is located in the very area responsible for the addition of the new seat. (South Salt Lake County and north Utah County - which has seen incredible growth over the last ten years.)

* All four districts contain rural-urban mixes, including the new 4th district. The west side of Utah County has a significant percentage of its land under the control of the federal Bureau of Land Management. That part of the county is also home to one of the largest agricultural zone in the state.

* These maps reflect the policies of the redistricting committee that follow rules established by decades of court precedent.

* Salt Lake City is kept whole, as per their request.

* Current congressional districts keep about half of the current area that has served as their base over the past 10 years. Congressman Matheson's district retains 55 percent of his current constituents.

* Yes, Salt Lake County was split in three. Utah and Davis counties are split as well.

* All four of Representative Matheson's opponents live outside the district in which he resides. Also, we left a number of declared conservative congressional hopefuls in District 3, which is occupied by Jason Chaffetz.

After having lived again through this ordeal, I thought I would share some thought to hopefully put the action into perspective.

First, I have never served on the reapportionment committee although I have been here for four such actions. It is very time consuming and extremely difficult because there are so many options and each have some unknown consequences. I have always felt that I could allow the process to work and then when the maps are final for my senate district make some fine tuning with information I know about my area that just looking at maps and trying to fit the puzzle pieces together will sometimes miss. This year was no exception. The proposed lines between my district and the one where Sen. Knudson from Brigham City serves divided the town of Nibley in half. We were able to put the full city in Sen. Knudson's district and take all of Mendon, Petersonboro, and Benson from him into mine and at lease keep each city whole. As far as I am concerned personally, I try to represent all of Cache County although about 35% are not in my voting district. I know all the other Cache County legislators believe and act the same way. I have no idea how many people I made mad with that action but Nibley will continue to have my support and can also require Sen. Knudson to respond as well.

The same line shifting occurred when we finished up the Congressional map. With a population of over 1.0 M and Congressional Districts limited to less that 700,000, there is no way Salt Lake County will not be divided. With the County divided three ways, the residents of Salt Lake County will be very impactful on the election of three congressmen. Gov. Herbert when he saw the map finally approved with a bi-partisan vote, wanted more rural area in the new district number 4. I doubt the Congressman who represents the other area will ignore Salt lake County because of its big impact on the State and hence their district and many of their voters will have strong ties to Salt Lake County through work and family so it won't be ignored. While the rural areas will not have the number of voters to really impact the election except in close elections so they will not be forgotten either. With the thousand of options, it is easy to understand why each legislator could find fault with the final product but there must be one that garners the needed votes to be approved.

The dire predictions of voters being disenfranchised is certainly premature. I reflected on what we did 10 years ago. Cong. Jim Hansen was so mad he joined the group pushing for an Independent Commission this year. Now we have Rob Bishop from Brigham City (hardly the major population center in his district), Jim Matheson who everyone said would be not elected because of the strong Republican district he was given (he just keeps winning) and Jason Chaffetz who does not even live in the geographic area of his district. I personally like a diverse district to represent because it make you work harder to understand the issues and work out compromises that take into consideration the wishes and impact on all of the people you represent. I suspect that there are as many people who don't vote because they are pleased with what they expect to be the results and see that their vote is not needed as there are those who don't vote because they thing that their candidate will not win any way. When Utah is such a strong Republican State, it is hard to draw maps without Gerry mandinging that will clearly allow a democrat to win.

I hate the sloganeering that occurs in politics. If we don't like the districts, we can yell "gerrymandering". If we don't like Mitt Romney, we can yell "he belongs to a cult". If we don't like Pres. Obama, we can yell "he is a socialist". If we don't like the negative remarks about Pres. Obama's economic push, we can yell "You are attacking him because he is African-American". With carefully selecting what I want to look at, I can pick apart each of the plans submitted and show they have divided areas of common interests (even if we could define such a term) and could be done better at lease in my limited eyes.

I sincerely want to congratulate Chairman Ralph Okerlund with committee members - Michael Waddoups, Stuart Reed, Kevin Van Tassell, Gene Davis, and Ben McAdams for all the time and effort they put into this difficult and thankless task. The public was given an enormous chance to become involved and many took advantage of that opportunity. When I hear a few grumble that they were not listened to, it reminds me of the many court cases I have had where after the judge has rendered his or her opinion, my client after winning 95% of what they wanted will complain that the Judge did not listen or he or she would have won 100%. I have to bite my tongue to not remind them that it may be that they did not deserved to win 100%.

At the September 22nd meeting, the Redistricting Committee passed a series of six Congressional "finalists". These finalists were a mix of citizen submittedmaps, as well as those drawn by legislators. These maps were also a variety ofthe pizza and doughnut hole approaches. The map adopted by the Committee as abase map and sent to the Legislature was one of these finalists, with a fewmodifications. The largest modification to this map is which district easternSalt Lake County would be in.

The base map has received its fair share of critiques, and blatant, unfoundedattacks. However, there are a few overlooked aspects to this map that its criticshave not mentioned.

Throughout the meetings the Committee held all across the state, many expressed the viewthat Salt Lake City should be kept whole. This map does so.

However,this map does not keep Salt Lake County whole, which many of its opponents havestated. First of all, this is logistically impossible. The ideal population ofa Congressional district is 690,971 people, and Salt Lake County far exceedsthat number. Secondly, if we look outside of Salt Lake County, we will noticethat Utah and Davis Counties are split.

This map has also been accused of gerrymandering. Let's move past the fact that noone has been able to come to agreement on the definition of this term, andaddress it simply as attempting to remove a particular representative fromoffice. Rep. Matheson said in a Tweet that "basedon map, a race for Gov or Senate is on the table." Rep. Matheson and others mayhave failed to notice that he still holds many of the rural areas thatconstituted his base over the past ten years.

On the topic, Lee Davidson at the Salt Lake Tribune wrote an article noting that fourRepublican Congressional candidates "Cherilyn Eagar, John Willoughby, Chuck Williams and JasonBuck — live outside the proposed new 2nd Congressional District that was drawnthis week for Matheson by the Legislature's Redistricting Committee." Thisarticle is found here.Davidson also mentions that these Congressional candidates have been drawn intoJason Chaffetz district.

While there will never be a perfect mapfor anybody, members of the Committee have worked hard to keep populationvariance at a minimum, per the United States Supreme Court. They have alsoworked to adhere to other principles the Court has laid out for redistricting.Speaker Lockhart said that the SpecialSession, just mere hours from now, "will be heated, and there will be some fromboth sides of the aisle unhappy with the results. But in the end we will sendgood maps to the governor for his signature."

Good maps are precisely what we havebeen striving for.

Utah Democrats File GRAMA Request on Behalf of People of Utah
Democrats Charge that Republican Leadership is Taking a 2x4 to the Democratic Process

SALT LAKE CITY - The Utah State Democratic Party filed an official GRAMA request today with the Utah State Legislature regarding the closed door, secret conversations leading to the current "fiasco" over Utah's congressional maps.

"Utah's Republican leadership is forcing our hand. The Utah Democratic Party has been compelled to demand transparency and fairness on behalf of all Utah citizens," said Jim Dabakis, Chair of the Utah Democratic Party.

"The poster children of closed cronyism in government - Representatives Dave Clark and Carl Wimmer - are working backroom deals to support their selfish political ambitions. They're throwing out months of work and hundreds of thousands of dollars of public money," continued Dabakis. "Someone must speak for the people of Utah. Someone must smash a battering ram through the closed doors. Moral and public pressure has not worked so far -- so today -- the Utah Democratic Party is being forced to file a GRAMA request to ensure our government is acting in a fair, open, and transparent manner."

"This is not a decision we are making lightly. We don't want to tie up the legislature and drag on an unnecessary process. BUT THE REPBULICAN PARTY BOSSES ARE TAKING A 2X4 TO THE DEMOCRATIC PROCESS AND THEY MUST REPENT!" Dabakis proclaimed. "They must open the doors, come to the table, and develop a compromise. We are willing to compromise - are they?"

Dabakis concluded: "The GRAMA request is the first step towards preparing a lawsuit on behalf of the people of Utah. We do not want to go the next step of subpoenas, affidavits, depositions, testifying under oath and official legal claims, but today, we feel we have no choice but to begin moving in this direction and we are reluctantly taking this step to ensure that ALL Utahns are represented."

A few thoughts:

* Jim Dabakis is a minority party chairman. His job is to win elections for the democrats, not craft good policy. So he lobs loony hyperbolic water balloons.

* The accusations do not reflect the reality of the unparalleled open public process we follow and to which we are committed.

* Example: Remember our caucuses on Tuesday? Early in the day you discussed and agreed that there is no way you would pass a new map. Unless we reached consensus on a citizen map or other map that had already been publically vetted, then we would not finish Tuesday. We would want to have another committee meeting and come back a different day. Much later, when we were back in chambers, citizens held a rally. Unconnected partisans, including Chairman Dabakis, are trying to claim they forced you to do that. Another example of intentionally skewing reality for partisan gain.

* They are fabricating their own reality, trying to demonize the legislature. That helps no one. It doesn't help the state. It doesn't even help him, in the long run.

* Jim Dabakis - who loudly denounces "secret map drawing behind closed doors" - was in the basement of the House last week, secretly drawing maps behind closed doors. His people are pretty quiet about that.

* Have you noticed the pattern? They seem to consistently accuse you of exactly what they do (or what they speculate their side would do if anyone trusted them to craft policy for the state).

* In almost all cases, Utah Legislators fail to live down to their accusations. I'm proud of that. However, in politics, perception has real-world consequences so this is a reminder to continue to be the strong statesmen and stateswomen your constituents elected you to be.

* Plato said, "When men speak ill of thee, live so as nobody may believe them." As you do that, honest, independent-minded citizens will see this publicity grab for what it is.

Dear Colleague--

As you know, I've had the opportunity to work on the redistricting committee the last few months. It's been a great experience. One of the best things about our efforts on the School Board, Senate and House maps was working across the aisle to put together maps that both Republicans and Democrats felt, for the most part, reflected the redistricting principles we adopted in the Spring. I'm proud of the work the committee and the legislature did on those maps and I'll stand by them against any challenge.

I think we still have a chance to do that same thing in our work on the Congressional map. I write to ask for your support of a Congressional map that I believe represents the most realistic chance of getting both bipartisan and citizen support for our work.

One of the six final maps the redistricting committee focused on was drawn by David Garber from Utah County. David's "Garber D" map was the only citizen map among the final six. I am not a fan of the idea that Utah is best served with four districts mixing urban and rural. But I recognize that support in the legislature for that approach is strong. And among the maps that went with a rural/urban mix in each district, I liked David's the best.

It needed some work to get the population numbers down to a one person deviation but I tweaked it a little bit and presented it last week at our final redistricting committee meeting. In the committee hearing, Speaker Lockhart expressed concern about Utah County being split three ways. So I went in and made a few adjustments to eliminate that problem. You can see the latest version of the Garber D map at http://www.redistrictutah.com/maps/congress-rep-king-garber-modified-king .

Here's what I like about this map. First, it splits no county more than two ways. Salt Lake, Utah and Davis counties are each split twice. Every other county is kept whole. We had to split about 21,000 folks from Davis county to make the numbers for District 1 work. The Utah County split is along I-15 through Lehi and American Fork in a way that is very similar to the base map that the committee adopted. In the South part of Utah county we tried to minimize splits of municipalities. The only city South of American Fork that is split is Salem. In Salt Lake county we worked to make the dividing lines between district 2 and the new district 4 as clean as possible. In the North part of the county we followed Redwood road down to I-215 and then moved over to 1300 West until we got to Riverton where the line moves over to I-15.

The map ends up with four urban/rural districts that have a population deviation of one person and are more compact than any other maps that have a chance of passing. But perhaps the best thing about it is that I think it doesn't come from any one of us in the legislature. It's a citizen map that I really believe makes sense. It's also a compromise between what partisan Democrats and Republicans want as their dream product. Finally, passing this map will restore the credibility and good will that we built up with the public when we created and passed the House, Senate and School Board maps but that have been damaged in the last couple of weeks.

I'd be happy to address questions or concerns you have about this map. And I would appreciate your serious consideration of it as we approach Monday and get together to continue our redistricting work.

Brian

Subject: Fwd: Redistricting Talking Points

>>> Ric Cantrell 10/4/2011 10:12 PM >>>
Senators - here is an electronic version of the talking points passed out today.

Redistricting Talking Points
10/3/11

Process:

1. Utah has just experienced the most open, transparent and inclusive redistricting process in history. Public input was sought after, welcomed and used. Legislators listened to those who provided input and hundreds of suggestions from the public were incorporated into the final versions of the maps.

2. Committee members represent all geographic areas of the state, and Democrats are over-represented on the committee; in other words, the ratio of Democrats on the committee is much higher than the ratio of Democrats in the state Legislature.

3. The redistricting committee held dozens of public meetings over the summer throughout the state. Committee members have fielded thousands of e-mails and phone calls.

4. An unprecedented public website has been launched - RedistrictUtah.com - that allows anyone to draw their own maps and comment on others. There were aptly named donut holes, pizza slices, layered cakes and hats with stripes. To date, there are nearly 300 maps drawn by legislators and the public, with more than 1,000 comments written about them. The base map for the State School Board is a citizen drawn map.

5. The population deviations between districts have to be extremely small to fulfill the constitutional principle of one man, one vote. Maps will be drawn using sound principles established by both state and federal court precedent.

6. In the Utah House map, some Democratic-leaning districts must be combined. Conversely, some Republican districts - more than the Democrat districts - also have to be combined. Friends from the same side of the aisle will likely have to run against each other or choose not to run, because in the end, the numbers reign supreme. Equal representation demands that district boundaries will shift to where the people have chosen to live.

Elected Officials or "Independent" Commission?

1. People vote for their Legislators and these elected officials are accountable to their constituents through frequent elections.

2. Utah's Constitution mandates that redistricting be done by the Legislature. As a collective group, the Legislature has an incredible knowledge of the geography, demographics and interests of the state and the people they represent. This comprehensive perspective of the Legislature would be hard pressed to duplicate in any commission.

3. The people's voice must be safeguarded above all else. The people in Utah spoke when they elected the composition of the Legislature to represent their interests.

4. Even with substantial public input and a thoroughly transparent process, calls continue for a so-called "independent commission" from a few small special interest groups who aren't getting their way. When their arguments are heard, but not adopted, they claim the Legislature isn't listening to anyone. This is just not true.

5. There is no such thing as an "independent" person or commission when it comes to political lines. Everyone has a conflict. Everyone has partisan views. An elected official is accountable to the people who elected them. An "independent" commission is accountable to no one.

6. There are currently 13 states that have decided to use some form of commission to make their redistricting decisions as opposed to their legislatures. History shows these commissions are still subject to lawsuits and that there are significant problems and challenges similar to legislative redistricting.

7. Arizona has a five member redistricting commission, two from each political party and one independent. That means when the decision is partisan, a single independent member has ALL the decision making power. Arizona just spent seven years embroiled in legal battles over just the composition of their state's redistricting commission.

8. Idaho has an "independent" redistricting commission. This year, their commission couldn't agree on maps because of cries of partisanship from both sides and now a second "independent" commission has been appointed.

Lawsuit Threat:

1. The many threats of lawsuits started long before the redistricting process began.

2. Democrats have sought to gerrymander by drawing maps for a special interest group. The longtime Executive Director of the Democrat Party and current staffer, Todd Taylor, has admitted to drawing the maps for the "Fair Boundaries" group. Other democrat maps also seek to give advantage to a political party.

3. Legal maneuvering comes from those who have decided to attempt to achieve through the courts what cannot be attained through the duly elected representatives of the people.

Partisan Permacritics

1. Democrat Party Chair Jim Dabakis has been promising to sue over redistricting since June when he was elected, even during the public input phase and before maps were being seriously considered.

2. Mr. Dabakis did not give the process a chance. He wants gerrymandered maps that disproportionally favor his party.

3. Mr. Dabakis is throwing verbal bombs to scare and confuse people rather than educating them and inviting them to be a part of the process. His ranting and raving turns people off to politics. It is disrespectful and uncivil. Name calling and trying to incite class warfare have no place in the redistricting process.

Dabakis Talking Points and Rebuttal

1. He refers to the Republicans as fat cat republicans because they keep cutting food stamps.
Response: Name-calling and trying to incite class warfare have no place in the redistricting process.

2. Blames the redistricting process in general.
Response: Mr. Dabakis did not give the process a chance.
Utah has just experienced the most open, transparent redistricting process in history. Legislators have listened to all who gave input and have drawn lines reflective of that input.

3. Blames the Republicans for having only one criteria, every district having the same number of people.
Response: The population deviations between districts have to be extremely small to fulfill the principle of one man, one vote. This is the overriding concern.

4. Claims what evolved out of that criteria was...1)Protect incumbent Republicans. Results in preposterous house and senate seats 2) Stack everything the Republican way.
Response: Some Democratic-leaning districts have to be combined. Conversely, some Republican districts - even more than the Democrat districts - have to be combined. Friends from the same side of the aisle will likely have to run against each other or choose not to run again.

5. Claims Republicans were dishonest and only pretended they were fair and honest.
Response: Utah has just experienced the most open, transparent redistricting process in history. Legislators have listened to all who gave input and have drawn lines reflective of that input.

6. He states The Salt Lake Tribune calls redistricting a joke and a sham, and Dabakis thinks it's a lower level than that.
Response: The Salt Lake Tribune is not unbiased. It is a special interest that constantly panders to the left in Utah and reports and opines against a Legislature that time and again is regarded as the driving force behind one of the best managed states and most thriving economies in the country.

7. Democrats came up with map based on the 6 criteria.....never mentions any of the criterion.
Response: Tell us what criteria you have used. What is drawn by the legislature will be legal using sound principles established by both state and federal court precedent.

8. Republicans are totally gerrymandering and it's a disgrace.
Response: The fact is that there is no evidence to support the accusation that Republican are guilty of gerrymandering. Conversely, the Democrats have been guilty of trying to gerrymander by making maps for a special interest group (Fair Boundaries).

10. Dabakis keeps using the statistic that Democrats received 42% of the popular vote. Yet he only has 27% of the vote proportion in the legislature. He alleges Republicans continue to gerrymander and that's why these figures are this way.
Response: Its about concentration and distribution, not statewide percentage. BYU professor Adam Brown provided this analysis: In Utah County, 20% of the votes cast in 2010 went to Democrat candidates, but Democrats won 0% of the county's races. This is not the result of a gerrymander; it is the result of the distribution of Democrat votes around the county. Democrats are not concentrated enough to win any seats in Utah County, no matter how the maps are drawn. In Salt Lake County, 45% of the votes cast in 2010 went to Democrats, but they won 52% of the seats. This results from a more concentrated distribution of Democrat votes around the county.

11. Claims the Congressional map is disenfranchising people all over the state. People in the avenues will be in a district with Iron and Washington.
Response: Since districts are based on equal populations, some of the Wasatch Front must be combined with other parts of Utah for 4 Congressional Districts.

Redistricting rolls forward as it should

By Casey Anderson
Utah State Senator, District 28 (Beaver, Garfield, Iron, Kane, Millard, Washington Counties)

On Tuesday, October 5, the Senate and House voted to adjourn until October 17 in order to allow additional public feedback and time to iron out wrinkles with potential U.S. Congressional maps.

On Monday, October 4, the Senate voted overwhelmingly to pass the Committee Adopted Base Map that has worked its way through the committee process over the last several months. Senator Christensen and I were the only two Republicans to vote against the map. Although the rest of the districts were drawn reasonably well, I felt that the 2nd district, of which we are a part, needed some adjustments in order to give Southern Utah better representation.

Despite drawing the very map that the Senate voted to adopt, the House was unable to come to a consensus and instead proposed a new map that was somewhat similar. The Senate decided that, although similar, the map showed too many significant changes to be considered "modified" and should not be adopted without additional time for public feedback. This is how the redistricting process is supposed to work. The people of Utah are being represented well by their elected officials, both Republican and Democrat.

Elected officials are held accountable by the voters in their districts and are best suited for these responsibilities. As a recent Ford commercial highlighted, "Nothing good ever came from a committee." As we have seen in many other areas of government, appointed committees are often just shills for elected officials who do not want to bear the burden of responsibility and can pass off blame to a committee that is unelected.

Yet the politicians still control the power because the committee members are appointed based on their support of the agenda of the politician who is appointing them. Essentially, instead of 75 House members and 29 Senate members all having a voice, the individuals who appoint the committee have all the authority.

When the Senate and House voted to adjourn until October 17, the media attempted to portray this event as being caused by a divided majority party that is infighting over a power grab.

The truth is that the House and Senate voted to adjourn in order to obtain more public feedback on more recently submitted maps that may be considered. Elected officials have fought diligently to make sure that the interests of their constituents are being represented and, when you have 75 members of the House and 29 members of the Senate who are each working hard for their areas, you are bound to take longer than anticipated and have vibrant discussions.

There are certainly a few things I would change with the process; but, all things considered, Utah has the best redistricting process in the nation and the citizens of Utah have been given an unprecedented opportunity to make a difference for our state. And they have. I appreciate all the work people from District 28 have put into the process, by phone, Email and the online redistricting tool.

We have done our best to keep communities of interest together, maintain strong representation for their areas, keep deviations low in order to protect tax-payers from litigation and, most importantly, to draw lines that make sense to everybody.

However difficult this process may appear here in Utah, compared to other states, we are clearly the best-managed state in more ways than one.

Rep. King,

Thank you for sharing your proposal(David Garber D) for the four Congressional districts. I look forward to the discussion regarding your proposal along with other proposals that have been submitted. I appreciate your personal sacrifices you have made to serve on the Redistricting Committee and your thoughtful study and review of the many proposals that have been submitted.

I am dismayed by the vitriolic dialogue displayed by some. I believe the process has been open for our citizens and a large number have taken the time to share their views and recommendations. Mr. Garber is just one great example.

Dear friend,

I hope all is well. We've been busy at the Legislature this summer with issues important to you. But perhaps none is as important as the redistricting process.

Redistricting is the redrawing of political district maps. It happens every 10 years in accordance with new Census numbers and ensures the constitutional principle of one person, one vote.

Our redistricting committee was made up of 19 members from all geographic areas of the state. Members of the minority caucus were represented on the committee in numbers slightly higher than their percentage of seats in the legislature.

Im proud to say that Utah has hosted the most open, transparent and inclusive redistricting process in Utah's history, and possibly our nation's history. Public input was sought, welcomed and incorporated throughout the process. Legislators listened carefully to those who provided input and many, many suggestions from the public were drawn into the final versions of the maps.

The process was as open as possible, with dozens of public meetings at the Capitol and around the state. Legislators responded to thousands of Email, phone calls, and public comments. A website was created - http://www.redistrictutah.com - that allows anyone to draw their own maps and comment on all others. Nearly 300 maps were drawn by legislators and the public, with more than 1,000 comments submitted.

The result was better maps.

We were pleased to hear from more educated citizens because - due to the website - they had first-hand experience with the challenges of drawing maps. Consequently, the comments and suggestions we received were higher quality and more usable than at any other point in our state's history. The committee even selected a citizen-drawn map for the State School Board.

In the Senate two east-bench districts currently held by Democrats were combined (due to the lack of population growth) and a new district created in Utah County (due to high population growth). In the Utah House of Representatives, some Democratic-leaning districts were combined. Republican districts - more in number than the Democrat districts - were also combined. Friends from the same side of the aisle will have to run against each other or choose not to run, because in the end, the numbers reign supreme, and each district must be very close to equal population. Equal representation demands that district boundaries will shift to where the people have chosen to live.

Lawsuit threat:

The threats of lawsuits started long before the first map was proposed. It appears that opponents to the constitutional process hope to achieve by judicial fiat what they could not gain by the vote of the people or their elected representatives.

While there are many important factors to consider in the redistricting process, the most important aspect is the principle known as one-person, one-vote. We have done everything humanly possible to draw districts that honor that principle. We are adhering to decades of legal precedent to ensure the work done by the committee protects citizen rights and is as insulated as possible from a legitimate legal challenge - although we will never be immune from partisan publicity stunts dressed up as legal challenges.

Working together to be fair:

The House of Representatives map passed 74-1, showing strong bi-partisan support. The Senate map also passed with approval from both parties, with only one dissenting vote. The congressional map has been more of a political lightning rod and the debate has attracted many critics. We are doing what we can to ensure the process is above reproach and the maps we draw are fair. I expect opposition by those who wish we would skew the map to favor their favored point on the political spectrum. However, Utah is one of the most conservative states in the nation, and the eventual map will likely reflect that reality.

While I am proud of the results so far, it is perhaps the process and citizen involvement in it that makes me the most proud. Your input into the map drawing process has been invaluable. The process is too big and too complicated for any one person alone. Many hands have made lighter work and have delivered outstanding results.

What's next:

Three of the four maps we need to pass are complete (School Board, House and Senate). The next few weeks will focus on Utah's new congressional district. Watch for a Redistricting Committee hearing on Friday, October 7th and a debate of the full Utah Senate starting Monday, October 17th. Please take some time to visit RedistrictUtah.com and leave your feedback on our collection of proposed congressional maps. You can also Email me any time with comments or questions.

Thanks again for your support and friendship.

Dear Senator Hillyard,

Please JUST VOTE NO to Utah's new Sumsion06 Adopted FInal U.S. Congressional Map at next week's Legislative Session. Your NO vote WILL MATTER. If citizens can get enough NO votes in the Legislature we have a plan of action.

This adopted map, dubbed the "pizza slice" plan, divides up communities of interest including rural and urban citizens, and purposefully dilutes the votes of unaffiliated voters and Democrats. This plan focuses on a narrow political agenda rather than keeping communities together, unfair to citizens and to democracy. Good plans have been submitted that keep communities together. (Utah Citizens Counsel Plan A, for example.)

I am with a political action committee called RepresentMeUtah! Our group consists of two Independents, a Republican, a Democrat, a Libertarian and a Constitutionalist. (www.representmeutah.org) We have a plan for immediate action if we can get enough NO votes. But also, next year we intend to appeal to 950,000 unaffiliated Utah registered voters to get out and vote for legislative candidates who are willing to stand up for democracy, including standing up for fairness in this redistricting process.

If you have any hesitation with this map, please vote NO.

I hope all is well. We've been busy at the Legislature this summer with issues important to you. But perhaps none is as important as the redistricting process.

Redistricting is the redrawing of political district maps. It happens every 10 years in accordance with new Census numbers and ensures the constitutional principle of one person, one vote.

Our redistricting committee was made up of 19 members from all geographic areas of the state. Members of the minority caucus were represented on the committee in numbers slightly higher than their percentage of seats in the legislature.

Im proud to say that Utah has hosted the most open, transparent and inclusive redistricting process in Utah's history, and possibly our nation's history. Public input was sought, welcomed and incorporated throughout the process. Legislators listened carefully to those who provided input and many, many suggestions from the public were drawn into the final versions of the maps.

The process was as open as possible, with dozens of public meetings at the Capitol and around the state. Legislators responded to thousands of Email, phone calls, and public comments. A website was created - http://www.redistrictutah.com - that allows anyone to draw their own maps and comment on all others. Nearly 300 maps were drawn by legislators and the public, with more than 1,000 comments submitted.

The result was better maps.

We were pleased to hear from more educated citizens because - due to the website - they had first-hand experience with the challenges of drawing maps. Consequently, the comments and suggestions we received were higher quality and more usable than at any other point in our state's history. The committee even selected a citizen-drawn map for the State School Board.

In the Senate two east-bench districts currently held by Democrats were combined (due to the lack of population growth) and a new district created in Utah County (due to high population growth). In the Utah House of Representatives, some Democratic-leaning districts were combined. Republican districts - more in number than the Democrat districts - were also combined. Friends from the same side of the aisle will have to run against each other or choose not to run, because in the end, the numbers reign supreme, and each district must be very close to equal population. Equal representation demands that district boundaries will shift to where the people have chosen to live.

Lawsuit threat:

The threats of lawsuits started long before the first map was proposed. It appears that opponents to the constitutional process hope to achieve by judicial fiat what they could not gain by the vote of the people or their elected representatives.

While there are many important factors to consider in the redistricting process, the most important aspect is the principle known as one-person, one-vote. We have done everything humanly possible to draw districts that honor that principle. We are adhering to decades of legal precedent to ensure the work done by the committee protects citizen rights and is as insulated as possible from a legitimate legal challenge - although we will never be immune from partisan publicity stunts dressed up as legal challenges.

Working together to be fair:

The House of Representatives map passed 74-1, showing strong bi-partisan support. The Senate map also passed with approval from both parties, with only one dissenting vote. The congressional map has been more of a political lightning rod and the debate has attracted many critics. We are doing what we can to ensure the process is above reproach and the maps we draw are fair. I expect opposition by those who wish we would skew the map to favor their favored point on the political spectrum. However, Utah is one of the most conservative states in the nation, and the eventual map will likely reflect that reality.

While I am proud of the results so far, it is perhaps the process and citizen involvement in it that makes me the most proud. Your input into the map drawing process has been invaluable. The process is too big and too complicated for any one person alone. Many hands have made lighter work and have delivered outstanding results.

What's next:

Three of the four maps we need to pass are complete (School Board, House and Senate). The next few weeks will focus on Utah's new congressional district. Watch for a Redistricting Committee hearing on Friday, October 7th and a debate of the full Utah Senate starting Monday, October 17th. Please take some time to visit RedistrictUtah.com and leave your feedback on our collection of proposed congressional maps. You can also Email me any time with comments or questions.

Thanks again for your support and friendship.

Senators - see attached.

Julie Dole would like to send the attached Email to GOP delegates that live in Salt Lake County senate districts not currently represented by Republicans, and includes you five in the signature area. It's a modified version of the draft Letter Home I sent yesterday (Senator Osmond made it better). Make sure you're okay with the phone number she included for you as well.

Thanks! Let me know.

A Message From Your Salt Lake County Officers & Republican Senators

Thursday, October 06, 2011

Dear Friends in Senate Districts 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, & 8,

We hope all is well with you and your family! Our Legislators have been busy this summer with many issues important to you. As you currently live in a Senate District not represented by a Republican we will share a message from the Republican Senators in Salt Lake County and invite you to contact us with any questions. We will focus our full attention in this email on a very important topic: Redistricting.

What is Redistricting?

Redistricting is the redrawing of political district maps. It happens every 10 years in accordance with new Census numbers and ensures the constitutional principle of one person, one vote.

Redistricting Committee

The state legislature is responsible to oversee this process. Earlier this year a redistricting committee was formed. It is made up of 19 members of the Legislature from all geographic areas of the state. Representatives from the Republican and Democratic parties were fully represented. In fact, members of the minority Democratic caucus were represented in numbers slightly higher than their percentage of seats in the legislature.

Our Thoughts on the Redistricting Process

We feel that the Utah Legislature has hosted the most open, transparent and inclusive redistricting process in Utah's history. Public input was sought, welcomed and incorporated throughout the process. Legislators on the committee listened carefully to those who provided input. There are many suggestions from the public that were drawn into the final versions of the maps.

Public Access

The process has been fully open to the public, with dozens of public meetings at the Capitol and around the state. Legislators on the committee responded to thousands of e-mail, phone calls, and public comments. A website was created - http://www.RedistrictUtah.com - that allowed anyone to draw their own maps and comment on all others. Nearly 300 maps were drawn by legislators and the public, with more than 1,000 comments submitted. This created more educated citizens because - due to the website - they had first-hand experience with the challenges of drawing maps. Consequently, the comments and suggestions the committee received were higher quality and more usable than at any other point in our state's history. The committee even selected a citizen-drawn map for the State School Board!

The Results – Utah Senate and House:

In the Utah Senate two east-bench districts currently held by Democrats were combined (due to the lack of population growth) and a new district was created in Utah County (due to high population growth). In the Utah House of Representatives, some Democratic-leaning districts were combined. Several Republican districts – even more in number than the Democrat districts - were also combined. The House of Representatives map passed 74-1 in the House, showing strong bi-partisan support. The Senate map also passed with approval from both parties, with only one dissenting vote.

The Results – U.S. Congress:

The U.S. Congressional map has been more of a political lightning rod and the debate has attracted many critics. We are doing what we can to ensure the process is above reproach and that the maps we draw are openly discussed and fair. Unfortunately, continued opposition is expected no matter what we do. Utah is one of the most conservative states in the nation, and we feel the final congressional map will likely reflect that reality as we follow the principle of One Person One Vote.

Principle: One-Person One Vote

While there are many important factors to consider in the redistricting process, the most important aspect is the principle known as one-person, one-vote. We have done everything humanly possible to draw districts that honor that principle. We are adhering to decades of legal precedent to ensure the work done by the committee protects citizen rights and is as insulated as possible from a legitimate legal challenge.

Potential Lawsuit Threat

The threats of lawsuits started long before the first map was proposed. It appears that opponents to the constitutional process hope to achieve by the legal process what they could not gain by the vote of the people or their elected representatives. We'll do our best to keep you informed if any legal challenge is filed.

Working Together To Be Fair

While we are proud of the results so far, it was the process and citizen involvement in that process that makes us the most proud. Your input into the map drawing process has been invaluable. The process is too big and too complicated for any one person alone. Many hands have made lighter work and have delivered outstanding results! We also want to thank the Redistricting Committee who have spent countless hours travelling and holding meetings throughout the state to hear and incorporate your feedback.

Final Steps:

Obviously, three of the four maps we need to pass are complete (School Board, House and Senate). The next few weeks will focus on our U.S. Congressional districts. Watch for a Redistricting Committee hearing at 9:00 a.m. on Friday, October 7th in Rm 445 State Capitol and a debate of the full Utah Senate starting Monday, October 17th. Please take some time to visit www.RedistrictUtah.com and leave your feedback on our collection of proposed congressional maps. You can also Email us any time with comments or questions.

Thanks for taking the time to read this and for your support of this process!

Here are the updated redistricting statistics. These numbers are current as of 11:30 PM October 14, 2011.

Registered users: 969

Submitted Plans: 323

Of those plans that passed criteria...
Congress: 199
House: 24
Senate: 30

School Board: 18

This represents a dramatic increase in the number of submitted plans and registered users. There were 251 submitted plans and 780 users on September 26th. In the two and a half weeks since then, 72 plans were submitted (almost entirely Congressional plans) and 189 users registered with the software.

The number of registered users was 780 on September 26th.

Dear Colleague--

As you know, I've had the opportunity to work on the redistricting committee the last few months. It's been a great experience. One of the best things about our efforts on the School Board, Senate and House maps was working across the aisle to put together maps that both Republicans and Democrats felt, for the most part, reflected the redistricting principles we adopted in the Spring. I'm proud of the work the committee and the legislature did on those maps and I'll stand by them against any challenge.

I think we still have a chance to do that same thing in our work on the Congressional map. I write to ask for your support of a Congressional map that I believe represents the most realistic chance of getting both bipartisan and citizen support for our work.

One of the six final maps the redistricting committee focused on was drawn by David Garber from Utah County. David's "Garber D" map was the only citizen map among the final six. I am not a fan of the idea that Utah is best served with four districts mixing urban and rural. But I recognize that support in the legislature for that approach is strong. And among the maps that went with a rural/urban mix in each district, I liked David's the best.

It needed some work to get the population numbers down to a one person deviation but I tweaked it a little bit and presented it last week at our final redistricting committee meeting. In the committee hearing, Speaker Lockhart expressed concern about Utah County being split three ways. So I went in and made a few adjustments to eliminate that problem. You can see the latest version of the Garber D map at http://www.redistrictutah.com/maps/congress-rep-king-garber-modified-king .

Here's what I like about this map. First, it splits no county more than two ways. Salt Lake, Utah and Davis counties are each split twice. Every other county is kept whole. We had to split about 21,000 folks from Davis county to make the numbers for District 1 work. The Utah County split is along I-15 through Lehi and American Fork in a way that is very similar to the base map that the committee adopted. In the South part of Utah county we tried to minimize splits of municipalities. The only city South of American Fork that is split is Salem. In Salt Lake county we worked to make the dividing lines between district 2 and the new district 4 as clean as possible. In the North part of the county we followed Redwood road down to I-215 and then moved over to 1300 West until we got to Riverton where the line moves over to I-15.

The map ends up with four urban/rural districts that have a population deviation of one person and are more compact than any other maps that have a chance of passing. But perhaps the best thing about it is that I think it doesn't come from any one of us in the legislature. It's a citizen map that I really believe makes sense. It's also a compromise between what partisan Democrats and Republicans want as their dream product. Finally, passing this map will restore the credibility and good will that we built up with the public when we created and passed the House, Senate and School Board maps but that have been damaged in the last couple of weeks.

I'd be happy to address questions or concerns you have about this map. And I would appreciate your serious consideration of it as we approach Monday and get together to continue our redistricting work.

Heads up.

Democrats will never give us credit. The papers will only do so part of the time. The battleground is honest independent-minded people in the middle trying to decide which side to believe. I worry that statements like this will resonate with them, depending on what happens next.

Dear Utah Resident,

I am outraged by the Republicans in the Utah Legislature. Before our very eyes, Republican Party bosses are drawing ridiculous districts to protect their incumbents, putting petty political interests ahead Utah citizens, and presenting terribly flawed maps that hurt all Utahans for the next TEN years.

DEMOCRATS WILL NOT stand silently and watch our freedoms be seriously eroded! Will you join us? All over the state, Republican manipulators are damaging our democracy. Ogden and Weber County are fractured into four Senate districts. Tooele City and County are split to protect Republican incumbents. Summit County is yanked to all corners of the state to divide the Democratic stronghold. Southern Utah and rural residents HAVE BEEN CLEAR - they want a Southern Utah Congressional District - but THEY ARE BEING IGNORED.

Don't believe us? It's not just the Democratic Party that is outraged.

- The Deseret News recently called this year's redistricting, "Legal, but not Ethical."
- The Provo Daily Herald attacked the proposed congressional maps, stating the "justifications are really shaky".
- The Associated Press described the process as akin to The Godfather.
- And even the Tooele County Republican Chair stated "To slap the people.with a map like this shows that the public has no place in the process".

Fair minded people like you need to step up to this arrogant bullying! Today, we are taking the stand and we URGENTLY need people all over Utah to BE BRAVE, lend your voice to the cause, and join the fight!

We have no time to lose. Utah's State House, Senate, and Congressional Districts are being GERRYMANDERED RIGHT NOW! You can stand up to their abuse and STAND WITH US by doing the following:

1. Tell EVERYONE how shameless and BLATANT the Republican gerrymandering is. Tell your neighbors, tell your mailman, tell your clerk at the grocery store!
2. Sign our LETTER OF PROTEST and join us by standing with the people of Utah for fair minded redistricting.Then FORWARD THIS EMAIL TO YOUR FRIENDS by clicking here. Proudly add your name so that THIS TIME, Republican bosses know we will not stand for this blatant political power brokering - not at the expense of our representation, our communities, and our voice.

3. Attend the OCTOBER 3, 2011 RALLY. Good government groups from across the state are joining forces to oppose this corrupt process. Come to the State Capitol at 11:00 a.m. on OCTOBER 3, 2011, and let the Republicans know we will not stand silent as they blatantly disenfranchise Utahans.
4. SEND YOUR STATE DEMOCRATIC PARTY A CONTRIBUTION NOW! Or better yet, SIGN ON AS A MONTHLY DONOR. Putting a halt to this arrogant abuse of power is not cheap! The domination of our State Legislature by untouchable, closed-caucus Republican Leaders is damaging Utah's ability to create jobs, attract tourists, and create the quality of life we all desire.

We have a legion of fabulous volunteers that contribute their time, enthusiasm and effort. Rest assured, that they are certain every dollar you donate is stretched to its absolute limit. But make no mistake, THIS BATTLE NEEDS CASH!

Any amount helps - from $5 to $1,000 - but HELP US TODAY. 100% of your donation will go to fight the fight - even if it means TAKING THE REPUBLICANS TO COURT! Utah Democrats do not have the long lists of lobbyists and special interests that bankroll Republicans. We DEPEND on your grassroots support. Without your help---we simply cannot fight our fight.

GERRYMANDERING IS HAPPENING NOW! It is URGENT that you act IMMEDIATELY. Tell your friends, come to the rally, JOIN OUR EFFORT and CONTRIBUTE TODAY. Pass this message on so we can fight together!

FYI - we have now applied KMZ and KML file information to a highly-zoomable GoogleMap application on RedistrictUtah.com. Seems like a good way to showcase our maps and involve people in the discussion.

Check it out:

Thoughts? Is this particular plugin going to work for us or should we keep looking for something better?

The Redistricting Committee began their pursuit of the best drawn map, with over 180 submissions from both legislators and the public. As time moved on, they worked down to their best six maps which were then released to the public.

Beginning October 3rd, during the redistricting Special Session, the Utah State Senate voted on and approved the committee adopted Congressional Map. Subsequently, this map was sent to the House of Representatives for review and possible signature.

Some have continued to speculate on whether the map is a doughnut hole or the pizza slice approach, Senate Chair Ralph Okerlund explains it is a combination of both. He believes the committee has worked hard to compromise and make this map the best fit.

Possibly the best example of this is the segmentation of Salt Lake County. Although the county is split three ways, each district contains a rural-urban mix aligning closely with those constituents who value strong ties to agricultural influence.

Jim Matheson has been serving as a Representative of many rural areas in the 2nd Congressional district for over 10 years. While some claim these boundaries are an attempt to "gerrymander" Matheson out of that district, this proposed map keeps many of those areas under his representation.

Another district contains all of Salt Lake City proper, a request made by many citizens the Committee spoke to, mixed with rural areas and populations. In trying to keep the city together and the districts as similar as possible, this proposed map also includes 55 percent of the same population as the previous district. This new district also contains the southwest side of Utah County which has a significant percentage of its land under control of the Federal Bureau of Land Management, and is one of the largest agricultural zones in the state.

Salt Lake County has been split adding another district and another seat, however, Utah County and Davis County have also been split. Utah County, while it has shown the most growth census wise within the last 10 years, still does not have enough population to contain a full Congressional district. Salt Lake County has more than the ideal population, making it a necessary move to split.

The modification and submission of this map will be reviewed by the House and most likely tethered back and forth between the two legislative bodies before being sent to the Governor for his signature. It's important to realize that this tethering is a process of compromise. The map will never be perfect or make everyone happy. But it will be the best fit. Guaranteed.

Mr. Joseph T. Wade, Policy Analyst
Mr. Leif G. Elder, Policy Analyst
Ms. Allison M. Nicholson, Policy Analyst
Mr. John L. Fellows, General Counsel
Ms. Kimberly A. Heiner, Legislative Secretary

Note: A list of others present, a copy of related materials, and an audio recording of the meeting can be found at www.le.utah.gov.

1. Committee Business

Chair Sumsion called the meeting to order at 10:26 a.m. He said that Rep. Barrus was participating in this meeting remotely.

MOTION: Rep. King moved to approved the minutes of the September 27, 2011 Redistricting Committee meeting with the modifications of removing the second sentence on the last full paragraph on page 5 that begins with "he said. . .". The motion passed unanimously.

2. Redistricting Plans - Committee Discussion and Action

SENATE PLANS

Chair Okerlund distributed and explained draft bill "Utah State Senate Boundaries and Election Designation" (2011S3-0030/006). He explained that the bill establishes the Senate boundaries and the election dates. He responded to questions from the Committee.

MOTION: Sen. Van Tassell moved to approve as a Committee bill "Utah State Senate Boundaries and Election Designation" with the Senate boundaries as reflected in "Okerlund Draft 4 of a Potential Senate Plan." The motion passed unanimously.

SCHOOL BOARD PLANS

Ms. Nicholson explained the minor technical changes that staff made to the Committee's School Board plan and said that the modified version was labeled "Sumsion 8 Boundary Changes." She responded to questions from the Committee. Mr. Wade clarified some of the census boundaries.

Mr. Fellows explained the "State Board of Education Boundaries and Election Designation" (2011S3-0029/005) draft bill.

MOTION: Chair Sumsion moved to approve as a Committee bill "State Board of Education Boundaries and Election Designation" with the technical changes to the school boundaries as reflected in "Sumsion 8 Boundary Changes." The motion passed unanimously.

HOUSE PLANS

Chair Sumsion distributed "House Draft 09-29-2011" and explained some changes that were made in Lehi, Springville, and Provo. Speaker Lockhart explained changes made to Orem and Lindon on the House map. She also said that the Utah County Delegation was planning on meeting within the next couple days and may have a few minor recommended changes to the House map. Rep. Froerer explained some changes made to the Ogden city portion of the map. Rep. Ipson explained changes made to districts 70 & 75 in the Washington County portion on the House map. Rep. Newbold explained changes made to Salt Lake County and showed two versions of Salt Lake County, "Salt Lake County Option A" and " Salt Lake County Option B" of the "House Draft 09-29-2011." She recommended adopting "Salt Lake County Option A," and said that additional changes would still need be to made to district 39.

Rep. Barrus explained changes he made in Davis County in the "House Draft 09-29-2011" map. Mr. Elder showed the changes Rep. Barrus made in Davis County to get the deviations lower.

Rep. Brown explained changes made to the House map in the rural areas to keep cities in the same district as well as to lower population deviations.

Speaker Lockhart asked if the district numbering of the districts was final when the Committee voted on a bill. Speaker Sumsion said that the district numbers may be changed a little.

Mr. Bob Rice, Syracuse City Manager, said that he is concerned that Syracuse City is divided into four districts in the current proposed House map. He asked the Committee to reconsider the division in Syracuse.

Mr. Glenn Wright, Fair Boundaries, Summit County resident, said that he liked the changes that have been made to Sanpete and Carbon County in the revised "House Draft 09-29-2011" plan. He also said that he does not like that Summit County is divided in the current plan.

Mr. James Humphreys, Weber County resident, suggested changes to several boundaries of the House map in northern Utah.

MOTION: Rep. Newbold moved to approve the "House Draft 09-29-2011" including "Salt Lake County Option A," with the direction to staff to change district numbers to reflect current district numbers as much as possible, and to authorize technical changes made by staff. The motion passed unanimously.

MOTION: Chair Sumsion motioned to approve as a Committee bill "Utah State House Boundaries Designation" (2011S3-0031/005) with the House boundaries as reflected in the "House Draft 09-29-2011" map. The motion passed unanimously.

Mr. Cannon explained the process for the redistricting bills. He said that there would be a paper component of the bill language with a file attached containing an electronic file that reflects the district boundaries. He said that all of the proposed maps would be available on RedistrictUtah.com. He also said that computers would be set up in the Capitol to allow for public access to view the plans during session. Mr. Cannon then said that changes to the maps during session would be adopted by substitute. He said that this process would allow for greater public access to view the map boundaries.

CONGRESSIONAL PLANS

Rep. King asked if the public would have the opportunity to make comment on congressional maps. Chair Sumsion said that there would be time for public comment on congressional maps.

Mr. David Irvine, Utah Citizens' Counsel, said that it was clear to him that Salt Lake County's population was so large that it would have to be divided between at least two congressional districts, but said he could see no reason to divide Salt Lake County more than once. He said that the currently drawn congressional map essentially disenfranchises the residents of Salt Lake County.

President Waddoups said that the public comments he has received from Salt Lake County residents in areas such as West Jordan and Taylorsville indicate that they felt like they had more in common with rural areas and wanted congressional representatives that could represent the interests in the state that would impact them. President Waddoups asked Mr. Irvine why he thought Salt Lake County residents had more in common with Salt Lake City than with Tooele or other rural counties when it came to congressional representation. Mr. Irvine responded that the Wasatch front has some of the most urban areas in the state of Utah and said that the interests of the people in the Wasatch front can be substantially different from people living in rural areas.

Mr. Irvine responded to additional questions from the Committee.

Mr. Dennis Webb, Holladay City Mayor, said that he is dissatisfied with the current congressional proposal because of the way it divides Holladay City. He said that many issues directly affect his community that do not affect the rural communities. He gave an example of the Federal government providing a grant for the Holiday Village Center project and said that without that congressional representation, they would not have been able to obtain those funds. He responded to questions from the Committee.

Sen. Pat Jones, Senate District 4, expressed her concern about the current proposed congressional plan and said that the congressional respresntatives are supposed to represent people of common interests at the federal level. She asked the committee to keep their options open with the Congressional map. She said that it was not a Republican vs. Democrat issue, but an issue that affects every citizen. She said that everyone deserves to have representation by someone who has a common interest.

Ms. Rochelle Dolim, Sandy resident, said that there are many differences between urban and rural issues and said that it is important that her representatives are familiar with the issues in her community. She said that a pizza slice approach to congressional redistricting does not make sense because it would be difficult for a representative to understand and have a passion for local issues.

Mr. Wright discussed and distributed a handout showing the metrics of several congressional plans including "Sumsion_06_A" congressional plan. He also said that Fair Boundaries had legislation to establish an advisory commission to conduct the Redistricting process for redistricting in the next ten years and he advocated adoption of this legislation. He responded to questions from the Committee.

Ms. Jenn Gonnelly, League of Women Voters, listed redistricting standards that the League of Women Voters supports. She said that the League would continue to advocate for a citizens redistiricting council to be organized. She said that the League is concerned that voter turnout is so low in Utah. She asked the Committee to re-look at the proposed congressional map and make changes. She also said that the League does not support a particular congressional map and didn't submit any maps for consideration.

Rep. King asked Ms. Gonnelly if the League thought that having a rural/urban mix would increase voter turnout. Ms. Gonnelly responded that the League members feel like a rural/urban mix is not compact and does not put people of common interests together.

Mr. Dimitri Moumoulidis, Salt Lake County citizen, said that religion is a key defining factor of Utah's communities with Utah's strong LDS presence. He said that over 90% of the Legislature and 100% of Utah's federal delegation is LDS, while only 60% of the population is LDS. He said this creates a situation where a large percentage of Utahn's do not feel like they are represented. He said that the current proposed "Sumsion_06_Modified Version A" splits counties that are primarily non-LDS instead of being grouped similarly as they are under the current map. He responded to questions from the Committee.

Mr. Humphreys, Weber County resident, said he supports the "Sumsion_06_modified_A" plan because it gives Utah both urban and rural congressional representation. He said that Nevada has the same number of congressional representatives as Utah and said that Nevada's rural and urban representatives are frequently at odds and vote against each other. He said that Utah has too few congressional representatives to afford to have a divided delegation.

Ms. Kelli Lundgren, Represent Me Utah, asked the Committee if any political or partisan data was considered in drawing maps.

Mr. Cannon said that there is no political data included on the redistricting computers at the capitol.

Chair Sumsion said he did not have any political data on the computer he used for redistricting.

Ms. Lundgren, said she was concerned about the "Congressional: Sumsion_06_Modified_A" plan because it was introduced at the last minute and did not consider keeping common interests together. She also said going after federal lands is a political community of interest and is not a redistricting process.

Mr. King said that he has had political data that was given to him unsolicited from outside sources.

Speaker Lockhart said that leaders of political parties are doing political analysis and have provided political data to some Committee members, but it is the organizations, not the Committee or Legislature creating the political information.

Mr. John Hansen, Sandy resident, said that he was concerned about the "Congressional: Sumsion_06_Modified_A" map because it was not considered throughout the state. He also said that the Committee needed to clarify how they were defining rural cities. He said that Salt Lake City should be represented by the majority of Salt Lake County. He also said that the capitol city of Utah should be placed with what the majority of the city wants, not the minority. He made suggestions on how to change the map to better represent the citizens in Salt Lake City. He also discussed a map he created on RedistrictUtah.com. He responded to questions from the Committee.

Mr. Fellows clarified that the classic definition of disenfranchisement is that people are unable to vote. He said that there is nothing that the Redistricting Committee has done that prevents any citizen from voting in an election. He also explained ways that people can get involved in the political process. He said that the American political system is set up for elected officials to represent all people wether or not that person voted for them.

MOTION: Rep. King moved to adopt "U.S. Congressional Plan I - Davis I" as the replacement congressional map.

Rep. King distributed and discussed "U.S. Congressional Plan -- Davis Plan I." He said that because over 75% of Utah's population lives in Salt Lake, Davis, and Utah Counties, it made sense for those areas to have congressional representation in proportion to that population. Rep. King said that it is important that rural Utah's voice is heard, and said that this proposed map would give rural Utah a voice. He said that Utah is not primarily a rural state, but is more urban. He said that the proposed map is compact and honors the population deviation.

President Waddoups said that he feels like he has been taken advantage of with this map introduced after the Committee had already approved a congressional base map. He said that if the Committee was going to go back to putting different maps on the table, then other maps should also be considered.

Sen. McAdams said that he heard throughout the meetings in Utah that people want to keep communities of interest together. He said that Salt Lake County is a community of interest and that the "U.S. Congressional Plan -- Davis Plan I" would keep the communities of interest in Salt Lake City together in a logical way.

SUBSTITUTE MOTION: Rep. Ipson moved to adopt "Sumsion_06_Modified_A" as the Committee plan.

Rep. Ipson said that the "U.S. Congressional Plan - Davis Plan I" would be logistically impossible for one person to cover that much land in Utah. He said that the "Sumsion_06_Modified_A" plan better serves the people of Utah in a broader sense.

Sen. Davis said that Utah is the seventh most urbanized state in the nation. He said that putting all the rural areas in Utah together would give rural Utah a strong united voice.

Chair Sumsion discussed a plan he had introduced in a previous meeting, "Sumsion_05" congressional maps. He said that many public comments focused on increasing voter turnout. He said that this plan would provide competitive seats, which could help increased voter turnout.

Chair Okerlund said that he supported the substitute motion and said that the Committee made an informed and unified decision when they supported the "Sumsion_06_Modified_A" plan.

Rep. King said that the vote on the "Sumsion_06_Modified_A" plan from his perspective was to move the discussion forward. He said that since he has had time to review the plan, he sees deficiencies in the plan and believes that the "U.S. Congressional Plan - Davis I" is a better plan. He said that having rural Utah drive the congressional boundaries is allowing the tail to wag the dog, when the majority of the population lives along the Wasatch Front.

The committee voted on Rep. Ipson's substitute motion to re-adopt "Sumsion_06_Modified_A" as the Committee plan. The motion passed with Sen. Davis, Sen. McAdams, Rep. King, Rep. Watkins, and Rep. Hendrickson voting in opposition.

MOTION: Chair Okerlund moved to approve as a Committee bill the "Congressional Boundaries Designation" bill (2011S3-0028/005) with congressional boundaries as reflected in the "Sumsion_06_Modified_A," and to allow for staff to make technical changes. The motion passed with Sen. Davis, Sen. McAdams, Rep. King, and Rep. Watkins voting in opposition.

Chair Okerlund thanked the Committee and staff for their work on the Redistricting Committee. He also thanked the public for their involvement in the redistricting process.

Chair Sumsion thanked the public for their involvement in the redistricting process. He said that serving on the Committee has been a sacrifice of personal time for the Committee.

Sen. McAdams said that while he is frustrated with the outcome of this meeting, he wants the public to know that the Committee respects each other despite differences of opinions.

Sen. VanTassell thanked the chairs for their efforts in leading this Committee.

Rep. Hendrickson also thanked the staff and chairs for their work on this committee.

Sen. Davis thanked the chairs for the job they have done to allow the minority party to have full participation in the redistricting process.

3. Adjourn

MOTION: President Waddoups moved to adjourn the meeting. The motion passed unanimously with Rep. Gibson, Rep. Brown, and Rep. Barrus absent for the vote.

Chair Sumsion adjourned the meeting at 1:04 p.m.

Sorry Bob - didn't see this until just now. Scott Jenkins and I met with him, Ally and John Pearce. I don't think he even mentioned Matheson or voting preferences. He did remind us why he wanted more rural area added to the 4th district. That was the main point, as I recall.

Senators - here is a draft Letter Home on Redistricting. Please edit, personalize and send to your list. Dawn or I can help if you want assistance. - Ric

Dear friend,

I hope all is well. We've been busy at the Legislature this summer with issues important to you. But perhaps none is as important as the redistricting process.

Redistricting is the redrawing of political district maps. It happens every 10 years in accordance with new Census numbers and ensures the constitutional principle of one person, one vote.

Our redistricting committee was made up of 19 members from all geographic areas of the state. Members of the minority caucus were represented on the committee in numbers slightly higher than their percentage of seats in the legislature.

Im proud to say that Utah has hosted the most open, transparent and inclusive redistricting process in Utah's history, and possibly our nation's history. Public input was sought, welcomed and incorporated throughout the process. Legislators listened carefully to those who provided input and many, many suggestions from the public were drawn into the final versions of the maps.

The process was as open as possible, with dozens of public meetings at the Capitol and around the state. Legislators responded to thousands of Email, phone calls, and public comments. A website was created - http://www.redistrictutah.com - that allows anyone to draw their own maps and comment on all others. Nearly 300 maps were drawn by legislators and the public, with more than 1,000 comments submitted.

The result was better maps.

We were pleased to hear from more educated citizens because - due to the website - they had first-hand experience with the challenges of drawing maps. Consequently, the comments and suggestions we received were higher quality and more usable than at any other point in our state's history. The committee even selected a citizen-drawn map for the State School Board.

In the Senate two east-bench districts currently held by Democrats were combined (due to the lack of population growth) and a new district created in Utah County (due to high population growth). In the Utah House of Representatives, some Democratic-leaning districts were combined. Republican districts - more in number than the Democrat districts - were also combined. Friends from the same side of the aisle will have to run against each other or choose not to run, because in the end, the numbers reign supreme, and each district must be very close to equal population. Equal representation demands that district boundaries will shift to where the people have chosen to live.

Lawsuit threat:

The threats of lawsuits started long before the first map was proposed. It appears that opponents to the constitutional process hope to achieve by judicial fiat what they could not gain by the vote of the people or their elected representatives.

While there are many important factors to consider in the redistricting process, the most important aspect is the principle known as one-person, one-vote. We have done everything humanly possible to draw districts that honor that principle. We are adhering to decades of legal precedent to ensure the work done by the committee protects citizen rights and is as insulated as possible from a legitimate legal challenge - although we will never be immune from partisan publicity stunts dressed up as legal challenges.

Working together to be fair:

The House of Representatives map passed 74-1, showing strong bi-partisan support. The Senate map also passed with approval from both parties, with only one dissenting vote. The congressional map has been more of a political lightning rod and the debate has attracted many critics. We are doing what we can to ensure the process is above reproach and the maps we draw are fair. I expect opposition by those who wish we would skew the map to favor their favored point on the political spectrum. However, Utah is one of the most conservative states in the nation, and the eventual map will likely reflect that reality.

While I am proud of the results so far, it is perhaps the process and citizen involvement in it that makes me the most proud. Your input into the map drawing process has been invaluable. The process is too big and too complicated for any one person alone. Many hands have made lighter work and have delivered outstanding results.

What's next:

Three of the four maps we need to pass are complete (School Board, House and Senate). The next few weeks will focus on Utah's new congressional district. Watch for a Redistricting Committee hearing on Friday, October 7th and a debate of the full Utah Senate starting Monday, October 17th. Please take some time to visit RedistrictUtah.com and leave your feedback on our collection of proposed congressional maps. You can also Email me any time with comments or questions.

Thanks again for your support and friendship.

Subject: Redistricting Talking Points

Senators - here is an electronic version of the talking points passed out today.

Redistricting Talking Points
10/3/11

Process:

1. Utah has just experienced the most open, transparent and inclusive redistricting process in history. Public input was sought after, welcomed and used. Legislators listened to those who provided input and hundreds of suggestions from the public were incorporated into the final versions of the maps.

2. Committee members represent all geographic areas of the state, and Democrats are over-represented on the committee; in other words, the ratio of Democrats on the committee is much higher than the ratio of Democrats in the state Legislature.

3. The redistricting committee held dozens of public meetings over the summer throughout the state. Committee members have fielded thousands of e-mails and phone calls.

4. An unprecedented public website has been launched - RedistrictUtah.com - that allows anyone to draw their own maps and comment on others. There were aptly named donut holes, pizza slices, layered cakes and hats with stripes. To date, there are nearly 300 maps drawn by legislators and the public, with more than 1,000 comments written about them. The base map for the State School Board is a citizen drawn map.

5. The population deviations between districts have to be extremely small to fulfill the constitutional principle of one man, one vote. Maps will be drawn using sound principles established by both state and federal court precedent.

6. In the Utah House map, some Democratic-leaning districts must be combined. Conversely, some Republican districts - more than the Democrat districts - also have to be combined. Friends from the same side of the aisle will likely have to run against each other or choose not to run, because in the end, the numbers reign supreme. Equal representation demands that district boundaries will shift to where the people have chosen to live.

Elected Officials or "Independent" Commission?

1. People vote for their Legislators and these elected officials are accountable to their constituents through frequent elections.

2. Utah's Constitution mandates that redistricting be done by the Legislature. As a collective group, the Legislature has an incredible knowledge of the geography, demographics and interests of the state and the people they represent. This comprehensive perspective of the Legislature would be hard pressed to duplicate in any commission.

3. The people's voice must be safeguarded above all else. The people in Utah spoke when they elected the composition of the Legislature to represent their interests.

4. Even with substantial public input and a thoroughly transparent process, calls continue for a so-called "independent commission" from a few small special interest groups who aren't getting their way. When their arguments are heard, but not adopted, they claim the Legislature isn't listening to anyone. This is just not true.

5. There is no such thing as an "independent" person or commission when it comes to political lines. Everyone has a conflict. Everyone has partisan views. An elected official is accountable to the people who elected them. An "independent" commission is accountable to no one.

6. There are currently 13 states that have decided to use some form of commission to make their redistricting decisions as opposed to their legislatures. History shows these commissions are still subject to lawsuits and that there are significant problems and challenges similar to legislative redistricting.

7. Arizona has a five member redistricting commission, two from each political party and one independent. That means when the decision is partisan, a single independent member has ALL the decision making power. Arizona just spent seven years embroiled in legal battles over just the composition of their state's redistricting commission.

8. Idaho has an "independent" redistricting commission. This year, their commission couldn't agree on maps because of cries of partisanship from both sides and now a second "independent" commission has been appointed.

Lawsuit Threat:

1. The many threats of lawsuits started long before the redistricting process began.

2. Democrats have sought to gerrymander by drawing maps for a special interest group. The longtime Executive Director of the Democrat Party and current staffer, Todd Taylor, has admitted to drawing the maps for the "Fair Boundaries" group. Other democrat maps also seek to give advantage to a political party.

3. Legal maneuvering comes from those who have decided to attempt to achieve through the courts what cannot be attained through the duly elected representatives of the people.

Partisan Permacritics

1. Democrat Party Chair Jim Dabakis has been promising to sue over redistricting since June when he was elected, even during the public input phase and before maps were being seriously considered.

2. Mr. Dabakis did not give the process a chance. He wants gerrymandered maps that disproportionally favor his party.

3. Mr. Dabakis is throwing verbal bombs to scare and confuse people rather than educating them and inviting them to be a part of the process. His ranting and raving turns people off to politics. It is disrespectful and uncivil. Name calling and trying to incite class warfare have no place in the redistricting process.

Dabakis Talking Points and Rebuttal

1. He refers to the Republicans as fat cat republicans because they keep cutting food stamps.
Response: Name-calling and trying to incite class warfare have no place in the redistricting process.

2. Blames the redistricting process in general.
Response: Mr. Dabakis did not give the process a chance.
Utah has just experienced the most open, transparent redistricting process in history. Legislators have listened to all who gave input and have drawn lines reflective of that input.

3. Blames the Republicans for having only one criteria, every district having the same number of people.
Response: The population deviations between districts have to be extremely small to fulfill the principle of one man, one vote. This is the overriding concern.

4. Claims what evolved out of that criteria was...1)Protect incumbent Republicans. Results in preposterous house and senate seats 2) Stack everything the Republican way.
Response: Some Democratic-leaning districts have to be combined. Conversely, some Republican districts - even more than the Democrat districts - have to be combined. Friends from the same side of the aisle will likely have to run against each other or choose not to run again.

5. Claims Republicans were dishonest and only pretended they were fair and honest.
Response: Utah has just experienced the most open, transparent redistricting process in history. Legislators have listened to all who gave input and have drawn lines reflective of that input.

6. He states The Salt Lake Tribune calls redistricting a joke and a sham, and Dabakis thinks it's a lower level than that.
Response: The Salt Lake Tribune is not unbiased. It is a special interest that constantly panders to the left in Utah and reports and opines against a Legislature that time and again is regarded as the driving force behind one of the best managed states and most thriving economies in the country.

7. Democrats came up with map based on the 6 criteria.....never mentions any of the criterion.
Response: Tell us what criteria you have used. What is drawn by the legislature will be legal using sound principles established by both state and federal court precedent.

8. Republicans are totally gerrymandering and it's a disgrace.
Response: The fact is that there is no evidence to support the accusation that Republican are guilty of gerrymandering. Conversely, the Democrats have been guilty of trying to gerrymander by making maps for a special interest group (Fair Boundaries).

10. Dabakis keeps using the statistic that Democrats received 42% of the popular vote. Yet he only has 27% of the vote proportion in the legislature. He alleges Republicans continue to gerrymander and that's why these figures are this way.
Response: Its about concentration and distribution, not statewide percentage. BYU professor Adam Brown provided this analysis: In Utah County, 20% of the votes cast in 2010 went to Democrat candidates, but Democrats won 0% of the county's races. This is not the result of a gerrymander; it is the result of the distribution of Democrat votes around the county. Democrats are not concentrated enough to win any seats in Utah County, no matter how the maps are drawn. In Salt Lake County, 45% of the votes cast in 2010 went to Democrats, but they won 52% of the seats. This results from a more concentrated distribution of Democrat votes around the county.

11. Claims the Congressional map is disenfranchising people all over the state. People in the avenues will be in a district with Iron and Washington.
Response: Since districts are based on equal populations, some of the Wasatch Front must be combined with other parts of Utah for 4 Congressional Districts.

Subject: X percent of votes means X percent of seats, right?

Senators,

One of the most damaging criticisms leveled against your redistricting efforts is that since Democrats get X percent of the vote they should have X percent of legislative seats. If not, Republicans must be gerrymandering. It's baloney, but damaging because reporters and citizens buy it.

This will come up many times over the next few days. Minority partisans mention it often and have even said it will be the cornerstone of a future lawsuit (which would be filed largely for PR purposes). We need to be quick with a rebuttal.

* If someone is only getting 30-40 percent of the vote they shouldn't have ANY seats in the Legislature. 50%+ 1 wins elections.

* On what world does the person who gets 30 percent win an election?

* It's about concentration and distribution, not statewide percentage. BYU professor Adam Brown provided this analysis:

"In Utah County, 20% of the votes cast in the 12 Utah House races held in 2010 went to Democratic candidates, but Democrats won 0% of the county's races. This is not the result of a gerrymander; it is the result of an unfortunate distribution of Democratic votes around the county. Democrats are not concentrated enough to win any seats in Utah County, no matter how the maps are drawn.

"In Salt Lake County, 45% of the votes cast in the 31 Utah House races went to Democratic candidates, but Democrats won 52% of the seats. This is definitely not the result of a Republican gerrymander, since it favors Democrats. Instead, it results from a better distribution of Democratic votes around the county."

More from Adam Brown. It would be a good idea to be conversant on this.

http://utahdatapoints.com/2011/06/do-single-member-districts-hurt-democrats/

In 2010, Democrats won only 17 of the 75 seats in the Utah House of Representatives. That's 23% of the seats. But if you add up all the votes cast statewide, you'll find that 30% of votes in these 75 races were cast for Democrats. How is it that Democrats can win 30% of votes but only 23% of seats? Some Democrats have cited this sort of disparity as evidence that the districts were gerrymandered back when they were drawn in 2001.

As it happens, they are jumping to conclusions. In Utah, we use single-member districts (SMDs), where the winner in each district is the one candidate who wins the most votes. There are many, many, many other electoral systems used around the world, and each is just as democratically valid as SMDs. Each has its benefits and drawbacks. The major drawback of SMDs is that they tend to magnify partisan disparities. Even with perfectly fair districts, we would expect our SMDs to award more seats to Republicans than their vote share might suggest.
A not-so-hypothetical thought experiment

To see how this is true, imagine that Utah voters were exactly 70% Republican and 30% Democratic. (That shouldn't be too hard to imagine.)

If Republicans and Democrats were evenly sprinkled throughout the state, and if the 75 districts were randomly drawn, then you would expect every district to be (on average) 70% Republican and 30% Democratic. And what happens if every district is 70% Republican? Republicans win 100% of the elections. In other words, even without any sort of partisan gerrymander, you would expect a 70% Republican voting majority to produce a 100% Republican legislative majority.

Now, let's consider the opposite example. Instead of being evenly sprinkled around the state, suppose that Democrats and Republicans were concentrated into completely separate areas, so that 30% of districts are 100% Democratic and 70% of districts are 100% Republican. Democrats would win 30% of votes statewide and also 30% of seats.

Obviously, Democrats and Republicans are not evenly sprinkled around the state, nor are they clustered into ghettoized districts. In some areas, such as Salt Lake City, Park City, and Moab, Democrats are clustered enough together that they form a local majority. Because of this clustering, we would expect Democrats to win seats in those areas. But we still would not expect them to win 30% of seats statewide. After all, many Democratic votes are "wasted" in Utah County and other overwhelmingly Republican areas. Even without a partisan gerrymander, Democrats cannot win a full 30% of seats unless Democratic voters are clustered in an optimal way.

Exclusive: Democratic Official Drew 'Nonpartisan' Redistricting Maps

By Bob Bernick, UtahPolicy.com Contributing Editor

Longtime Utah State Democratic Party official Todd Taylor drew the legislative and congressional redistricting maps submitted to the Legislature's Redistricting Committee by the citizen group Fair Boundaries, UtahPolicy learned Tuesday.

Glenn Wright, head of Fair Boundaries, confirmed that Taylor, who was the party's state executive director more than 15 years until this summer when he took on a new paid party position, drew the Fair Boundaries maps.

Wright said their maps were not biased in favor of Democrats, adding that incumbents' home addresses were not taken into account, nor were any voting patterns of would-be district citizens.

You can see the Fair Boundaries and other entries at the state's redistricting web site: www.redistrictutah.com. The group's U.S. House map is here. It's Utah House plan is here. The group's state Senate map is here.

Wright, who in 2010 was the Democratic candidate for House District 53, (he lives in the Park City area), told UtahPolicy that he believes the Fair Boundary maps are fair and should be considered as viable alternatives to the state Senate and House maps already approved by the Redistricting Committee.

The committee has also adopted a State School Board map and will recommend a four-seat U.S. House redistricting map before lawmakers meet Oct. 3 in special session to formally adopt districts that congressional, legislative and school board members will be elected from for the next 10 years.

"Ours are (politically) unbiased maps," said Wright.

However, when Wright and other supporters of the citizen-drawn maps presented their outlines to the Legislature's Redistricting Committee, they did not say that Taylor drew the maps. The clear impression was that members of the volunteer Fair Boundaries group drew the maps.

Senate President Michael Waddoups, R-Taylorsville, a member of the Redistricting Committee, told UtahPolicy Tuesday night: "I'm disappointed in the deception that Fair Boundaries drew their maps when they didn't."

"And I'm sorry for Fair Boundaries members who were snookered into something - I doubt they knew that their maps were drawn by the past (executive director) of the Democratic Party."

Taylor initially declined comment to UtahPolicy Tuesday afternoon, suggesting that Wright be contacted. After Wright was interviewed, Taylor responded to UtahPolicy questions.

Wright said Fair Boundaries -- a citizens' group that failed to gather enough voter signatures to get on the 2010 general election ballot a new law that would have set up a citizen redistricting commission to make recommendations to the Legislature on the 2011 redrawings -- decided to use Taylor for several reasons.

First, said Wright, Taylor has a "wealth of knowledge" about redistricting, having been the Democrats' lead man in the 1991 and 2001 redistricting efforts.

Second, the state Democratic Party's redistricting software "was much easier to use" than the online citizen-accessible program at www.redistrictutah.com.

"For one thing, our software provides metrics that we find very useful and important," said Wright.

In presenting their state Senate and House redistricting proposals, for example, Fair Boundary folks listed how many times cities and counties were split by their maps, the total miles of boundaries (indicating how compact their districts were) and other measurements.

Wright at one point asked committee members and their staff if the state's software could provide the same numbers on the committee-generated maps. It was unclear if the same measurements could be made.

"Our software cost $5,000," said Wright on Tuesday. "Theirs cost something like $80,000. I'm sure it could do it if they wanted to."

Taylor said the same thing, adding that he would be glad to provide those metrics on the committee maps if state legislative staffers couldn't.

"They are important metrics," said Taylor, who agreed with Wright that his maps did not take into account any voting patterns or partisan information and didn't consider where incumbent legislators lived.

"Basically, I read Fair Boundaries' initiative and their goals and followed that outline" in drafting the maps for the citizen group, said Taylor.

Unlike 10 years ago, the state Democratic Party itself is not going to suggest any redistricting maps this year, said Taylor, because "we don't think it will be helpful."

Hearing of Taylor's involvement in the Fair Boundaries map-making, GOP legislative leaders immediately called foul - adding that they don't know how seriously they can take the Fair Boundary maps knowing they were drawn by a state Democratic Party paid employee.

"I have no problem with the Democratic Party drawing maps, and they should, but be honest about it," said Waddoups.

Even with this "deception," Waddoups said the committee would continue to examine the Fair Boundary maps. "We've already gotten some good ideas out of their maps. But (Fair Boundaries) shouldn't have represented that they were their maps when in fact they were not."

Taylor said he was not paid to draw the maps, he did those for free, in part, as an "intellectual exercise" to see how close he could draw maps that kept cities and communities of interest together while having the smallest population variances.

Fair Boundaries' Senate map is amazing in one respect, according to the state's web site it has 0.00 percent variance. In other words, as a whole the 29 districts are exactly the same in population down to the one-hundredth percentile.

The committee's own guideline is that no Senate or House district can be greater or lesser than 3.5 percent in population variance, although the committee's own maps have smaller variances that that.

Said Taylor: "I found out that you can get much more compact (districts), keep those communities together, have very low (population) variances than anything I've seen" coming out of the Redistricting Committee's own work.

At the very least, said Taylor, the Redistricting Committee should use the Fair Boundaries maps as templates, or starting points, for their own map-drawing, since, he believes, those maps start at the most fair, basic origins "of keeping communities together without taking into account any political information" - like putting incumbents in their own districts.

Waddoups said from what has now been learned about Fair Boundaries actions, he believes it will harm their effort at getting an initiative passed creating an "unbiased and unaffiliated citizen commission."

"Seeing what has happened in Idaho (where a citizen redistricting commission was challenged in court) and with this deception, that will make it even harder to say that (a citizen commission in Utah) should be done. Obviously, this (Fair Boundaries') effort was not independent. And independent was their critical word - they (Fair Boundaries) wanted an independent commission.

"But as (legislators opposed to such a commission) have said, there is no such thing as an independent commission - and there was nothing independent about their (Fair Boundaries') maps.

"Everyone has a point of view, as we've just learned today," said Waddoups.

Top Utah Dem behind reform group's redistricting map

By Lee Davidson

The Salt Lake Tribune

A top Democratic Party official secretly drew redistricting maps that reform groups portray as examples of how to fairy draw boundaries without considering how they affect parties or incumbents.

Todd Taylor, senior adviser to the Democratic Party who until recently was its executive director, drew the maps for Fair Boundaries at Democratic offices with full support of the party. Fair Boundaries unsuccessfully tried to put on the ballot an initiative that would put redistricting in the hands of an independent commission instead of the Legislature.

"Todd had the software and he had the time, and we had no money," said Glenn Wright, a board member of Fair Boundaries. That group said in public hearings that it drew the maps, and the maps were also supported by several other reform groups.

"We discussed with him [Taylor] how it would be drawn, and that he would strictly follow the rules in our initiative," and he did it as an unpaid volunteer, Wright said. "We made sure that no incumbent data was used in drawing the maps. I still don't know how many incumbents would be affected by it."

Why didn't the group say up front that it used Taylor as a consultant?

"Because we knew it would be controversial," Wright said.

Utah Senate President Michael Waddoups said Fair Boundaries has hurt its cause by using Taylor.

"If their cause is to get an independent commission, they certainly didn't help it. They probably made our case that there is no truly independent commission or people. Everybody has a point of view," Waddoups said.

He adds that Democrats also likely hurt themselves. "Fair Boundaries was taken advantage of in my opinion" because many members of reform groups who backed the map "didn't know that the Democratic Party and Todd Taylor had been drawing this. I feel bad for that."

He said Democrats and Taylor have the right to draw maps, but should have been up front about it. In fact, he said about the Fair Boundaries map, "We got some good information from it. Our maps improved because of what we were able to glean from it. So it's a good process, I just wished they have been more willing to disclose the origin."

Utah Democratic Party Chairman Jim Dabakis said the map was drawn with full support and permission of his party, and, "I'm not ashamed of it."

"When they came to us and said, 'Here is our criteria, and here is what we would do -- and we simply don't have the money to spend $20,000 to buy the software to draw the maps. Will you guys use our criteria and do it?' We said sure," Dabakis said. He said the party had software to measure such things as how many cities are divided and how compact districts are, which state software does not do.

He added that the maps Taylor drew are disliked by many Democrats because they put many of the party's incumbents together. He said if the party had drawn its own partisan maps, they would have looked much different.

"It's not a Democratic map. It's a long way from it," Dabakis said. Meanwhile, he charges that Republican legislators have come up with "incumbent protection maps" that gerrymander lines in ways that make sense only to help incumbents.

Dabakis said choosing to draw the Fair Boundaries map "is part of a responsibility the party has to the public to show what fair boundaries look like."

Despite the revelation about who drew its maps, Wright says he still plans to formally present Fair Boundaries' proposal for congressional redistricting on Thursday at a meeting of the Legislature's Redistricting Committee, "and probably take a lot of garbage from Waddoups about it."

That committee has already adopted "base maps" for the Legislature and state school board boundaries -- which may still be tweaked -- and is about to begin debate on congressional maps. The Legislature is scheduled to consider the maps in a special session beginning Oct. 3.

Several GOP leaders told The Tribune this week that no one congressional map appears to yet have support. But they said Republicans in general seem to support a "pizza slice" plan that would divide Salt Lake County in three or four pieces, and combine each with a rural area.

For example, Rep. Ken Sumsion, R-American Fork, the House chairman of the committee, has said that would help ensure that members of Congress represent both urban and rural issues, and that concept is important to him and many GOP legislators.

However, Democrats have charged it is an attempt to dilute its votes in its stronghold of Salt Lake County, and make it more likely to create all-Republican congressional districts.

Speaker Lockhart: A word about redistricting
September 30, 2011

A message from Speaker Becky Lockhart:

A lot has been made about various groups' threats to sue the state over redistricting efforts.

Multiple groups including both Republicans and Democrats are threatening to sue if they don't get what they want. It brings to mind the phrase that if everybody hates what you're doing, you must be doing it right.

Redrawing Utah's political lines is constitutionally mandated and a matter of necessity because of population growth. The Legislature will meet next week to approve maps that will be used for the next 10 years. Those maps will include 75 state House districts and 29 state Senate districts, 4 U.S. Congressional districts and 15 state school board districts.

Everyone along the political spectrum including the deceptively labeled "good government" groups want their own special gerrymander under the guise of fairness.

But despite the easy sound bites from political party hacks, radio talk show hosts and editorial boards, we don't draw arbitrary lines. We can't. The population deviations between districts have to be extremely small. There may be philosophical differences, but what is drawn will be legal because we are using sound principles established by both state and federal court precedent.

As a result, some Democratic-leaning districts will have to be combined. Conversely, some Republican districts - more than the Democrats, in fact -- will also have to be combined. Friends from the same side of the aisle will likely have to run against each other, because in the end the numbers reign supreme. Equal representation demands that district boundaries will shift to where the people have chosen to live.

We've been elected as legislators to make tough decisions. We look at all sides, hear all arguments and do some serious soul-searching. And though the Legislature is constitutionally mandated to draw districts, we have involved the public at every turn.

The redistricting committee, of which I am a member, has held dozens of public meetings over the summer throughout the state. Committee members represent all geographic areas of the state, and even over-represent the ratio of Democrats in the Legislature. We've fielded thousands of e-mails and phone calls.

We launched an unprecedented public website -- RedistrictUtah.com -- that allows anyone to draw their own maps and comment on others. To date, there are nearly 300 maps drawn by legislators and the public, with more than 1,000 comments written about them. The School Board map adopted by the committee was originally submitted by Rob Horner, an interested citizen from Logan.

But even with huge public input and a thoroughly transparent process, calls continue for a so-called "independent commission" from groups who quite simply aren't getting their way. When their arguments are not convincing, they claim we aren't listening. This is just not true.

Aside from the fact that these groups are deceptive in their purpose, it's a ludicrous idea that there is even such a thing as an "independent" person or commission when it comes to political lines. Everyone has a conflict. And I, for one, would rather have an elected official accountable to the people be making the decisions rather than someone who will make decisions and then disappear into the night.

It's been disappointing, though perhaps not surprising, to hear of the planned lawsuits over a redistricting effort that is not only incomplete, but has been the most open and inclusive in Utah's history.

The legal maneuvering comes from those who want us to break the basic laws of mathematics and the political will of the people of Utah. They think they shouldn't have to face the same realities everyone else will. They've decided to attempt to achieve through the courts what cannot be attained through the duly elected representatives of the people.

It's willful ignorance or outright self-importance on their part that they won't acknowledge that the very demands they are making are the very things that will get us successfully sued at a cost of hundreds of thousands of taxpayer dollars.

Their talk is cheap. Their threats are opportunistic. Their verbal bomb-throwing is meant to obscure the reality of a fair process.

Starting on Monday, the Legislature will be in session to debate the maps, as we've been elected to do. It will be heated, and there will be some from both sides of the aisle unhappy with the results. But in the end we will send good maps to the governor for his signature.

If the naysayers think they've got themselves a lawsuit after that, there's really only one thing left to say:

Bring it on.

Welcome home. Things are about what you'd predict - this morning we'll see if the House has gelled on a map.

Here is Bob Bernick's article leading up to today's work.

Redistricting Fight Moves Back to Legislature Monday Morning

by Bob Bernick, UtahPolicy.com Contributing Editor

10/17/2011 | 0 views | 0 | 0 | |

One GOP senator tells UtahPolicy he expects House Republicans to either approve of the four-seat congressional map the upper body sent them two weeks ago, or make "modest" changes to the map.

House Republicans will reportedly see at least two maps – perhaps more – in their Monday morning caucus (likely closed to the press and pubic).

The 58-member GOP caucus will then decide which, if any, they like, and then move to the floor for debate and votes.

It's hoped that before the day is out both bodies will find one map that both can pass with at least a majority vote (and, if it goes well, many more "aye" votes than that).

Rep. Ken Sumsion, R-American Fork, the House's chair of the Redistricting Committee, has prepared two maps. You can see them here and here. They are named Sumsion15 and Sumsion16.

The map the Senate passed is here. It was actually drawn by Sumsion several weeks ago, and in bill form is SB3002, which was passed 18-9 with two absent by the Senate and sent to the House.

So even that map only got three votes more than needed for Senate passage. How the senators will vote on any amendments to that map by the House waits to be seen.

But one Senate source told UtahPolicy that at least 15 GOP senators (a majority in that body) would approve House amendments that are "modest" and "reasonable."

But, this senator says, if House members make major changes to SB3002 or introduce a whole new map, which likely won't go well in the Senate.

No votes were taken on SB3002 in the House, with the GOP representatives meeting in closed caucus much of the Oct. 3/Oct. 4 special session days before both bodies adjourned until Monday to work on a congressional map compromise.

In the meantime, state and county Democratic Party officials have been slamming the Republicans, even saying that in their pending lawsuit over redistricting they will be subpoenaing leading Republicans in an effort to find out what was said behind closed doors.

Sumsion – who has doggedly been drawing dozens of possible congressional and Utah House maps over the last six months – says he doesn't think the latest threats by Democratic Party leaders will have much of an effect on Monday's special sessions.

"They've been saying they would sue us for months," said Sumsion. And deposition subpoenas are part of that process, he added.

Still, it is of some interest that when GOP Gov. Gary Herbert signed a half-dozen or so bills this past week that were passed by the special session two weeks ago, he didn't sign the Utah House and Senate redistricting maps.

That's because the Senate NEVER SENT its redistricting bill to Herbert. According to the official tracking for SB3001 Third Substitute, it is still in the Senate.

And HB3001 6th Substitute, the House's redistricting map, wasn't sent to Herbert until Oct. 7.

That means, since the Legislature is still in session, Herbert has 10 days to sign it, let it become law without his signature, or veto it.

So, if the House doesn't recall HB3001 Sixth Substitute, Herbert must act by midnight Oct. 17 – Monday. And he'll know by then what has happened in the congressional redistricting.

In other words, it would be possible for legislative GOP leaders to amended either the House or Senate legislative redistricting maps, should the majority Republicans want to harm their minority colleagues where it really hurts – in their own district re-elections.

That would really rile up the Democrats. And be bad PR for Republicans, who have already taken some public hits over the redistricting process this year.

That comes even though the 2011 redistricting has been the most open and transparent process in the state's history, mainly because computer technology has allowed citizens to draw their own maps and submit those to the Legislature, and allowed new maps to be shared with interested persons quickly.

In any case, even at this late date, a few GOP legislators are still looking for compromise with their Democratic colleagues.

Sumsion last week told UtahPolicy that he would like to work with Sen. Ben McAdams, D-Salt Lake, over a congressional map that McAdams submitted during the Oct. 3-4 special session. That map is here.

"I don't know if I'll have time. I don't know if something can be worked out," said Sumsion.

"But I think the McAdams map has some good qualities, that with some changes could work," said Sumsion.

Whether other Republican legislators would accept that, or whether they just want to make a few changes to the Sumsion15 or 16 maps and get out of Dodge, remains to be seen.

Dear Ric,

My name is Reed Rasband. I had the chance to work with you when I was serving as a 4-H State Ambassador with Craig Dart. I now attend Brigham Young University and serve as the the webmaster for the BYU Political Review.

The BYU Political Review is a student-run and student-written paper on campus that promotes political awareness, action, and debate among our student body. We cover all aspects of politics, including local and Utah politics. We are looking forward to covering the special redistricting session of the legislature that begins next week. As part of this we would like to do an interview exploring the redistricting process and the unprecedented input the public has had on it. With your involvement in the Senate, I thought your experience would be invaluable in helping us to do this. Are there any legislators (preferably redistricting committee members) who you know would be willing to be interviewed? Also, would it be better to do an interview during or after the special session? Any help and advice you have for us would be much appreciated.

Also, I am a member of your Government 2.0 group on LinkedIn. I am very interested in implementing your ideas on the BYU Political Review website. We already use a Facebook group (BYU Political Review) and Twitter (@BYUPolitics) in addition to the features on our website, but would like to broaden our internet reach. I would love to hear more from you on how the Utah State Senate is using new media to increase political awareness and how we can use Government 2.0 strategies in the BYU Political Review.

The BYU Political Review website is byupoliticalreview.com.

Thank you,

The Redistricting Committee began their pursuit of the best drawn map, with over 180 submissions from both legislators and the public. As time moved on, they worked down to their best six maps which were then released to the public.

Beginning October 3rd, during the redistricting Special Session, the Utah State Senate voted on and approved the committee adopted Congressional Map. Subsequently, this map was sent to the House of Representatives for review and possible signature.

Some have continued to speculate on whether the map is a doughnut hole or the pizza slice approach, Senate Chair Ralph Okerlund explains it is a combination of both. He believes the committee has worked hard to compromise and make this map the best fit.

Possibly the best example of this is the segmentation of Salt Lake County. Although the county is split three ways, each district contains a rural-urban mix aligning closely with those constituents who value strong ties to agricultural influence.

Jim Matheson has been serving as a Representative of many rural areas in the 2nd Congressional district for over 10 years. While, some claim these boundaries are an attempt to "gerrymander" Matheson out of that district, this proposed map keeps many of those areas under his representation.

Another district contains all of Salt Lake City proper, a request made by many citizens the Committee spoke to, mixed with rural areas and populations. In trying to keep the city together and the districts as similar as possible, this proposed map also includes 55 percent of the same population as the previous district. This new district also contains the southwest side of Utah County which has a significant percentage of its land under control of the Federal Bureau of Land Management, and is one of the largest agricultural zones in the state.

Salt Lake County has been split adding another district and another seat, however, Utah County and Davis County have also been split. Utah County, while it has shown the most growth census wise within the last 10 years, still does not have enough population to contain a full Congressional district. Salt Lake County has more than the ideal population, making it a necessary move to split.

The modification and submission of this map will be reviewed by the House and most likely tethered back and forth between the two legislative bodies before being sent to the Governor for his signature. It's important to realize that this tethering is a process of compromise. The map will never be perfect or make everyone happy. But it will be the best fit. Guaranteed.

Redistricting Histrionics

Written by: Jesse | Filed under: Utah on October 18th, 2011 | 9 Comments »

Last night, the Utah Legislature finally signed off on a map for Congressional districts. Unsurprisingly, more than a few individuals were engaged in over-the-top weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth that could teach William Shanter more than a few things about over-acting. While I can accept a lot of legitimate complaints about the final product (it's not my first choice either), a lot of the claims made by critics are either logically inconsistent or flat-out lies.

First off, many people claim that all redistricting is a highly partisan affair, and that the Republican majority cannot be trusted to treat Democrats fairly. The votes on the House and Senate districts, however, simply don't bear out this claim. The House map cleared by a 74-1 vote. The Senate approved its own boundaries by a 25-1 vote. In both cases, a single, lone Democrat voted against the districts for their own body. It doesn't sound like partisanship had a lot to do with those maps at all. Again, this isn't a judgement on the Congressional maps, merely an observation that fairness can and has been in at least part of this process.

Another common claim is that the public isn't being heard or considered in the process. However, a citizen map for the Congressional districts was one of the six finalists approved in committee (by a unanimous vote, I might add). The Garber map received significant discussion and consideration. Even though it did not ultimately prevail, it did shape the discussion. That's kind of the point; it's really difficult to tell what kind of influence the various citizen maps had on the process, and it's really lazy to say that because a citizen-proposed map was not approved modification-free that the input had no effect.

A real head-shaker is the insistence that specific principles trump others when drawing districts. A lot of space has been spent trying to define a "community of interest", but there's a lot of ways you can go about it. You can go by partisan, ethnic, or demographic make-up. You can use city, street, county, or major road boundaries. I don't think any of these is more valid than the other. In cases of partisan break-up, you can create a bunch of "safe" districts (3 R, 1 D in most proposals), or you can try breaking them up a bit to see what happens. Who's to say that one of these is better than the other? Why should either urban or urban/rural mix districts carry the day? In the end, it's all judgement calls. Just like the citizen maps, the failure of your preferred principles to be reflected doesn't mean that no consideration was given to them.

I can understand how people can be upset with the finished product for not reflecting their preferred solution or principles, but resorting to over-the-top rhetoric in the 11th hour is not just unproductive, it's highly damaging. Ask yourself this question: do you need to convince the people who already agree with you, or the people who are on the fence? Do you think that putting a Congressional map on-par with the Holocaust the way the Daily Herald has done makes you look good to reasonable people? And most importantly of all, where have you been during the last four years as the composition of the legislature used to make these decisions was elected?

Those who think that preaching to the choir for a couple of weeks can substitute for making rational arguments while participating in the electoral process are simply divorced from reality. It might help beat the minority party's fundraising drum, but don't expect much appeal beyond a few partisans, nor anything in the way of tangible and long-lasting results.

  The perfect capstone to the last few weeks. Democrats have planned to use this as a political issue since the beginning, regardless of the final map. Which is expected and understandable. But, to me at least, they lost a chance to come out as the principled party. Instead, they didn't get the donut they wanted and threw a hissy fit.

    That's just it: there are plenty of good arguments against the adopted Congressional map and the principles it chose to follow. Instead of making those, a lot of Democrats (and a few Republicans and non-partisans) chose to go for the fiery rhetoric and sound bits. It's low-information and acts as if voters are too dumb to understand reasoned and nuanced arguments.

Posturing is what parties do. Its good for fundraising. That said there are very legitimate concerns to be raised over the process. Last night I heard several lawmakers claiming overwhelming support for the urban rural mix. One of these lawmakers referenced a meeting I was at in which every single person who spoke was in opposition to it. In fact, of the four meetings I attended personally or covered for KVNU, I did not hear a single rural voter speak in support of that agenda. The final map wasn't a "modification" it was a completely different map. So much so that legislative legal counsel was telling House reps to stop calling it the "Garber modification." I agree that often political parties try to spin a message for their own gain, that's politics. But no one should defend the obvious spin lawmakers were trolling out during the special session. The process could have been much better, and only lawmakers shoulder the blame for what it lacked, not Dabakis or Wright. Good map or bad map, the legislative body has in no way come clean with voters of Utah, and they shouldn't be proud of that.

And all of that is valid criticism. Screaming that democracy has been axe murdered in a dark alley, however…

And to play devil's advocate, we pretty much knew the legislature was pushing for the pizza slice to carve up left-leaning enclaves. Odds are good that those who felt that the legislature's plan wasn't desirable were probably speaking more loudly in public. Those who were okay with the plan likely didn't feel as much of a need to speak or chose more convenient means such as phone calls and email. Of course, nobody knows for sure, but it's something to consider.

Excellent post.

For all you people who are angry at the map – I hope you submitted your own during the many weeks the public was invited to do so? No? hmm. Utah's population patterns are unique. Some thing to keep in mind before you dismiss the whole effort:

1. The districts have to have equal population, Geography is secondary.
2. Salt Lake county has to be split at least in two. There are too many people to have it in one district.
3. The districts have to have both urban and rural, That's just how the population is. All the districts need part of the Wasatch front in order to have enough people. All counties in the state except the 5 on the Wasatch Front (SL, Utah, Davis, Weber, and Cache) put together do not have enough people for one district.
4. More than just SL county must be split. Utah county is too small. Davis and Weber together are too small, Cache and Washington are too small. The only other way to do this is to have 3 mostly urban districts along the Wasatch front and one containing the rest of the state plus chunks of the Wasatch front counties adding up to about 50,000 people. Having 4 urban/rural districts is at least as logical as having 3 urban and one rural with selected chunks of urban gerrymandered in.

5. There aren't enough Democrats living close to each other to have a safe democratic seat. So, even if that was a valid concern, it just isn't possible.
6. There aren't enough Democrats in the legislature, and they aren't united enough to make a difference. That's why the map from the Rep. caucus was passed, all they need are most of the Republican votes.

Jesse, you're cherry-picking. It can easily be said that the process of drawing the Congressional maps did not reflect the bipartisan work that resulted in the other maps. The Garber Map was never seriously considered; the map that was produced was a variation of Sumsion's.

The governor can veto the map and request they choose one that came from the redistricting committee that we apparently spent a million dollars and a bunch of time on just to be torpedoed at the last minute by Sumsion's awkward mess.

Yes, I have used the map tool, and there's no rational reason for the south east side of SLC to arbitrarily be cut into 3 districts with blocky, indecipherable cuts between them (and I'd say that even if I didn't live in such an awkwardly divided community).

I'd actually like to see the Democrats draw a map they like, explain their reasoning, and then openly negotiate a compromise map. Then we could honestly say we had an open process and wouldn't need a lawsuit.

The majority party can even offer open preconditions to such a plan. Here are mine: The best maps have small perimeters, keep cities together and follow natural boundaries like mountains, rivers and interstates. I am not a fan of donut hole plans because they force the other representatives to cover a larger geographical area, and thus provide less representation for the additional smaller communities in their district.I see no geographical or common governance-interest reason to combine Salt Lake City and Saint George into one district, and the same applies for any other crescent shaped district.

Re: GRAMA Request

Dear Mr. Fellows,

It has come to our attention that Democratic members of the Redistricting Committee may have engaged in improper and possibly illegal activities involving the use of partisan data in constructing redistricting maps.

As you know, the 2011 Redistricting Procedural Guidelines prohibits political data from entering the State computer systems, and also requires that the use of staff time and redistricting resources be first cleared by a member of the Committee.

Based upon information and belief, individuals affiliated with the State Democratic Party have attempted to circumvent these rules -- and the GRAMA statute itself -- by various inappropriate methods, including, but not limited to, exchanging partisan data through non-governmental email systems, sharing data via text message to personal and government cell phones, and using partisan data in the map room.

Therefore, pursuant to the rights guaranteed under the Government Records Access and Management Act, we request the following documents from the Utah State Legislature.

- All SMS messages sent and received by Sen. Gene Davis, Gene Davis, Ben McAdams, Ross Romero on their state-issued cellular phones, and all redistricting-related messages on their personal cellular devices between September 1, 2011 and October 12, 2011.

- All email to and from Sen. Gene Davis, Ben McAdams, Ross Romero and the internet history on their computers between September 1, 2011 and October 12, 2011.

- All communications and records of access to the map room involving Todd Taylor, David Irvine, Maryann Martindale, Glen Wright, Jim Dabakis, Peter Corroon, Gene Davis, Ben McAdams, Ross Romero and Alyson Heyrend.

- All email sent and received by Rep. Brian King between September 1, 2011 and October 12, 2011.

- All cellular phone records of Rep. Brian King between September 1, 2011 and October 12, 2011.

As the State Republican Party Chairman, this request is made on behalf of Republicans living in the State of Utah, so we therefore ask for your response within five business days pursuant to state law.

Sincerely,

Thomas Wright
Utah State Republican Party Chairman

Subject: Citizen Input

The Redistricting Committee has travelled to 17 cities, and held 26 meetings listening to citizens from all across the state. The citizens have expressed concern and addressed issues with a number of maps. This input does not fall on deaf ears.

Sen. Okerlund has repeatedly expressed his gratitude for this input, and has personally changed a number of maps based on public input the Committee gathered around the state.

On the original proposal to divide Tooele: "We heard in Tooele that they associated themselves with western Salt Lake County than Utah County." This change is still shown in the Senate map passed by the State Senate just today.

On the community of Mendon: Mendon was originally proposed to be in a separate Senate district, not included with Logan. After public comment at the Logan meeting, a map was drawn to adhere to this wish. That change is also a piece of the Senate map passed today.

On Utah County: It was noted in the Provo meeting, that Utah County had enough population for 5 Senate seats held entirely within the county itself. This change has been held in the Senate base map, which is under consideration by the Legislature.

On citizen maps: "[They] are important part of the process, and they've had some good and interesting ideas. They did affect the maps. When we do the final maps, the final maps are going to reflect the ideas we heard at the meetings."

Spencer Nitz
Utah State Senate
801.538.1035 (o)
801.598.9999 (c)

The Redistricting Committee began their pursuit of the best drawn map with 160 submissions from both Legislature and the public. As time moved on, they voted down to their best six maps which were then released to the public.

On October 3rd, at a Redistricting Special Session, The Utah State Senate sent its one chosen Committee Adopted Congressional Map to the House of Representatives for review and possible signature.

Although there is still speculation on whether the map is a donut hole or a pizza, Chairman Senator Ralph Okerlund assures us it is a combination of both. It is not a matter of one or the other. He believes his committee has worked hard to compromise and make this map the best fit.

Possibly the best example of this is the segmentation of Salt Lake County. Although the county is split three ways, each district contains a rural-urban mix aligning closely with those constituents who value strong ties to agricultural influence.

Jim Matheson has been serving as a Representative of many rural areas for 10+ years, and although some claim this map is an effort to remove Matheson, this proposed map keeps many of those areas under his representation.

District 2 contains all of Salt Lake City, as per request, mixed with rural lands and population. In trying to keep the city together and the Districts as similar as possible, this proposed map also includes 55 percent of the same population as the previous District. This new District also contains the west side of Utah County which has a significant percentage of its land under control of the Federal Bureau of Land Management. As one of the largest agricultural zones in the state, it makes sense that it shares a District with the whole of Salt Lake City.

Yes, Salt Lake County has been split adding another District and another seat, however, Utah County and Davis County have also been split. Utah County has shown the most growth census wise within the last 10 years, making it a necessary move to split.

The modification and submission of this map will be reviewed by the House and most likely tethered back and forth between the two Legislative bodies before being sent to the Governor for signature. It's important to realize that this tethering is a process of compromise. The map will never be perfect or make everyone happy. But it will be the best fit. Guaranteed.

Good points, Kordel. I feel curious to know why these variances are as strict as they are. Greater lenience might allow for more counties and cities and neighborhoods to remain united rather than to be divided among different districts. It would also result in slightly-less-equal representation, of course, but such representation will become increasingly unequal during this next decade, anyway. I guess that it depends upon what we value most. Once upon a time, each Utah county elected one state senator, but then someone somewhere (perhaps the Supreme Court) decided that it was more important to divide representation equally among people than among counties.

I'm talking about parts of Washington County, SW Salt Lake Valley, NW Utah County, etc. The allowed 3.5% variance is only 1,300 residents. Those margins will be made up in a matter of 1-2 years in the faster-growing areas.

With that flexibility, if not maintaining intact communities, you might at least be able to align some of the Senate and legislative boundaries. For example, Wasatch County is divided in the Senate along 2400 S and in the House along Center St.

County integrity, at least, should be retained where feasible.

With all due respect, this map goes completely out of whack as soon as it crosses the south Utah County line. District 67 is rediculously gerrymandered to continue to guarantee that the incumbent, (Rep. Painter, Mona) will have no serious competition even though his home county (Juab) is the smallest of the three counties included in this proposed district. How in the world does it make sense to reach all the way up to the northern end of Tooele county to get enough population for this district when it can be had so much more senseably, compactly, and logically by simply combining Sanpete and Juab into a single district? The numbers are perfect for that. I know it works because I and others have submitted maps that do exactly that.

It defies logic that this district needs to run in a narrow, very sparcely populated, illogical corridor that reaches clear up to northern Tooele County to collect enough population when the very population it needs is sitting on the door step in one of the counties the district is already proposed to be comprised of. The only logical explaination for such an artificial construct is that someone with a vested interest wants to see that this district is kept as non-competitive with tiny Juab as possible.

We thank the Committee for separating Sanpete and Carbon Counties as we requested. But if Sanpete must be divided, we urge the House to consider drawing the line further south and eliminating the gerrymandered north end of this proposed district that will serve to only anger and alienate the citizens of Sanpete and Tooele counties against any candidate that may emerge from Juab County, simply as a matter of principal. Respectfully...

For the past year, including numerous public meetings, we have heard the redistricting committee talk about principles that would guide its decisions. This map demonstrates that, in the end, what trumps any principle is protection of incumbents. Drawing a line through the Great Salt Lake from Brigham City into Tooele County, around several other closer population centers in Weber and Davis Counties, just to provide enough voters to fill Sen. Knudsen's district is the very definition of "gerrymander." Then look at the crooked line extended around Sen. Thatcher's house in West Valley City to include him in the district that extends out to Wendover and Dugway. For the next ten years, you again effectively deny the seventh largest county in the state a resident senator. No, we are not "the center of the universe," but we expected and hoped for better than this.

I've seen many U.S. Congressional redistricting proposals this summer that divide Utah into various "pizza slices" and/or "doughnut holes"---but I still prefer a regional division, instead, such as this one that I've proposed. It establishes one district for each cardinal direction---it creates a northern district (#1) for both Logan and Ogden to share, it creates a southern district (#4) for both Orem/Provo and St. George to share, and it then halves the remaining Wendover-SLC-Vernal corridor into both a western district (#2) and an eastern district (#3) via a line that bisects SLC but otherwise roughly follows I-15 without splitting any other cities.

These four proposed U.S. Congressional districts split only one city (namely Bountiful and SLC and Pleasant Grove) in each of three counties, while leaving all other 26 counties intact, which division is rather minimal, and could easily remain so minimal as these four districts' borders are readjusted every decade. These districts also generally keep every rural hinterland connected to its most appropriate urban center and, similarly, they consistently extend along major transportation routes rather than across impassible natural terrain, unlike various districts in most other proposals. These districts' shapes are far from gerrymandered but are more contiguous and/or compact than most. They even let Utah's present U.S. Representatives Bishop and Chaffetz and (perhaps) Matheson continue to reside in their present districts, whether for better or for worse.

So, that's my case in favor of this proposal that I've submitted. I'd appreciate any helpful suggestions for its improvement, so that I may perhaps submit an even better revision of it for further consideration. Thank you!

I submitted a plan with 21 intact counties. Some of the county splits are UGLY

For example in districts containing Tooele and Wasatch, there are not even main roads to connect the opposite ends of the districts.

West Provo has been disenfranchised from the Provo/Orem senate seats for the last 10 years - it's time to put us back with the rest of our community. Those districts should all be shifted west so that west Provo is finally districted back in.

This map was apparently drawn with little regard for county and city boundaries. Tooele County is chopped into three odd-shaped districts that stretch into four other counties, apparently to serve the needs of two incumbents outside the county. Even little Grantsville is chopped in two, with part in a district with Nephi and the other part in a district with Delta, Ephraim and Manti. It would make so much more sense to leave Grantsville together with the rural parts of Tooele County and combine Nephi with Delta, Ephraim, and Manti. The district that stretches from northern Tooele County to Iron County is anything but compact. Reason and fairness have been thrown to the wind. This map is "Exhibit A" to show why legislators should not be drawing their own districts. The result is senseless, power-hungry, self-serving madness. I can only hope the Governor steps in with a veto.

For the past year, including numerous public meetings, we have heard the redistricting committee talk about principles that would guide its decisions. This map demonstrates that, in the end, what trumps any principle is protection of incumbents. Drawing a line through the Great Salt Lake from Brigham City into Tooele County, around several other closer population centers in Weber and Davis Counties, just to provide enough voters to fill Sen. Knudsen's district is the very definition of "gerrymander." Then look at the crooked line extended around Sen. Thatcher's house in West Valley City to include him in the district that extends out to Wendover and Dugway. For the next ten years, you again effectively deny the seventh largest county in the state a resident senator. No, we are not "the center of the universe," but we expected and hoped for better than this.

With all due respect, this map goes completely out of whack as soon as it crosses the south Utah County line. District 67 is rediculously gerrymandered to continue to guarantee that the incumbent, (Rep. Painter, Mona) will have no serious competition even though his home county (Juab) is the smallest of the three counties included in this proposed district. How in the world does it make sense to reach all the way up to the northern end of Tooele county to get enough population for this district when it can be had so much more senseably, compactly, and logically by simply combining Sanpete and Juab into a single district? The numbers are perfect for that. I know it works because I and others have submitted maps that do exactly that.

It defies logic that this district needs to run in a narrow, very sparcely populated, illogical corridor that reaches clear up to northern Tooele County to collect enough population when the very population it needs is sitting on the door step in one of the counties the district is already proposed to be comprised of. The only logical explaination for such an artificial construct is that someone with a vested interest wants to see that this district is kept as non-competitive with tiny Juab as possible.

We thank the Committee for separating Sanpete and Carbon Counties as we requested. But if Sanpete must be divided, we urge the House to consider drawing the line further south and eliminating the gerrymandered north end of this proposed district that will serve to only anger and alienate the citizens of Sanpete and Tooele counties against any candidate that may emerge from Juab County, simply as a matter of principal. Respectfully...

I'm talking about parts of Washington County, SW Salt Lake Valley, NW Utah County, etc. The allowed 3.5% variance is only 1,300 residents. Those margins will be made up in a matter of 1-2 years in the faster-growing areas.

This map was apparently drawn with little regard for county and city boundaries. Tooele County is chopped into three odd-shaped districts that stretch into four other counties, apparently to serve the needs of two incumbents outside the county. Even little Grantsville is chopped in two, with part in a district with Nephi and the other part in a district with Delta, Ephraim and Manti. It would make so much more sense to leave Grantsville together with the rural parts of Tooele County and combine Nephi with Delta, Ephraim, and Manti. The district that stretches from northern Tooele County to Iron County is anything but compact. Reason and fairness have been thrown to the wind. This map is "Exhibit A" to show why legislators should not be drawing their own districts. The result is senseless, power-hungry, self-serving madness. I can only hope the Governor steps in with a veto.

I submitted a plan with 21 intact counties. Some of the county splits are UGLY

For example in districts containing Tooele and Wasatch, there are not even main roads to connect the opposite ends of the districts.

With that flexibility, if not maintaining intact communities, you might at least be able to align some of the Senate and legislative boundaries. For example, Wasatch County is divided in the Senate along 2400 S and in the House along Center St.

County integrity, at least, should be retained where feasible.

Paul,

You can superimpose the old State House of Representatives boundaries over this map using the online redistricting tool. Open the House base map (the username is Utah Legislator Plans), go to the Create Tab, click on the blue arrow on the left side of the screen, click on the arrow by Utah_ReferenceLayers, click on the arrow by Political Boundaries, and enable "State House Current". If you need any help with this, send an email to redistrictutah@utah.gov.

I like this map, more so than the Senate Base Plan Map. Boundaries seem much more compact. Tooele is intact and includes Juab and other common interest communities. Salt Lake County districts are more compact, including West Valley. West Salt Lake City is whole. I am not sure if West SLC and North Salt Lake are common communities of interest, but if they are, this is good for their representation. I-15 clearly separates, without confusion, Senate districts in Washington County.

More cities and towns seem to be kept together, although I have not run metrics on this.The weakness: southern Utah County cities are perhaps more divided than need be. Perhaps this can be resolved.Kelli Lundgren, RepresentMeUtah!

Salt Lake City has very little in common with St. George. Moab and Sandy don't share common interests. The citizens of Utah have been screaming about keeping their communities together and this map completely disregards that. Anyone who is an ethical lawmaker, Democrat or Republican, would draw logical maps without regard to incumbents or political affiliation -- apparently we don't have many of those in this state.

I'm a resident of downtown Salt Lake City, and I'm not happy to see the Salt Lake Valley split along 2100 South. I have much more in common with the interests of people in West Valley City and Midvale than I do with the fine residents of St. George, Delta, Blanding, and Manti. This looks a lot like an obvious attempt to split the Democrats in the Avenues, University and East Bench neighborhoods of Salt Lake County into a separate district from the Democrats in the west side of the county.

This district contains all 5 of Utah's national parks, Lake Powell, Grand Staircase, and huge tracts of National Forest and other Federal land, and it's lumped together with the urban core of Utah's largest city along with an international airport, the state's flagship university, and an expanding urban transit system? Somebody's interests are going to get poorly served by the Congressperson elected from this district.

I should also not be surprised to see that the Democrats in Park City are split off into a third district, and the population of Democrats in Carbon County and Moab are in a fourth separate district. Wow. Talk about blatant. This is what happens when the politicians get to choose their voters.

Every single person in Utah has a representative in the Utah state house and the Utah state senate. So in this case, everyone was represented. Just because this map passed with neither public input nor public support does not make this map in some way less valid than any other map that was submitted. We live in a republic, not a democracy; therefore, our government is managed by our representatives, not by "public" input and support. If you don't like the form of government of our nation, you live in the wrong nation and nothing is stopping you from moving to a nation with a different form of government. Personally, I like our form of government, even if I don't always like the decisions made by our representatives.

Claims of gerrymandering are also without merit. There is no evidence that the political affiliation of constituents played any role in where the boundaries of the congressional districts were decided. The fact that the population of the districts only varies by a single constituent is very impressive. The votes on this bill were not only made by republicans, nor were they only made by democrats. The thing we have to remember is that every representative has their own vote, and we should hold each individual responsible for their vote, not an entire political party.If you don't like how your representatives voted, I recommend that you contact your representatives. Any way around it, though I don't like the fact that my U.S. Congressman changed to someone I would not have voted for, and who does not vote the way I like, I'm willing to honor the will of the Utah legislature and move forward, instead of bickering about the past. If Governor Herbert chooses to veto the redistricting bill, that's another story, because that's in the future. However, it does nobody any good to gripe about the results of a perfectly ethical and legal (and transparent) process.

We are better served by having representation in our own community. Make the dividing line at Davis County and leave Rose Park alone.

Follow the votes! Follow the money!

Approximately 2,084,000 Utahns live in Weber, Davis, Salt Lake, and Utah counties. That is about 75.4% of the total.

The remaining 680,000 Utahns (24.6%) live in "rural" areas.

Do you really, really think that congressional representatives are going to give the 170,000 rural Utahns in their districts (~25% of the 24.6%) the attention they need and deserve compared to the potential votes and especially the potential campaign contributions from the 521,000 potential voters in the urban and suburban precincts?

Members of the legislature need to wake up and smell the Postum-like morning beverage. The "pizza slice" approach is the worst possible scenario for Utahns living in rural areas. Utah's approximately 680,000 rural residents ought to have their own district and a member of congress completely focused on their issues as included in this map.

Here in Cedar City, we have no voice in who represents us in Congress. We are always outvoted by voters in Salt Lake. So, we in southwest Utah have a congressman who votes with Pelosi 93% of the time. I can't see how such a congressman represents Utah, let alone southwest Utah. But, the big-city voters of Salt Lake do that to us.

I don't know that a rural vs urban argument in districting is valid. There is something else going on.

Most of us who live outside Utah's big cities still live in cities, albeit smaller ones. The same can be said of all states. I don't live on a farm. Nobody in my family lives on a farm. Other than needing farm products to live (food, clothing), I am no more or less affected by "rural" issues than is a denizen of Salt Lake. We who don't live in big cities share the same issues such as roads, crime, schools, recreation, high taxes, over-regulation, commerce, immigration, taxes, national defense, civil rights, clean water and air, etc.

Everyone has their differing ideas on how each of those various issues should be solved and who should do it. Differences in "how" and "who" are shown by the colors red and blue on election maps. Since nearly all of us live in cities, there must something other than living in cities per se going on that causes big cities to be red and everywhere else to be blue on the election map -- even in Kalifornia.

I think the root of that difference is values. Big cities tend to attract those who are dependent on government because big cities have the government offices that provide support for the dependent. Big cities have the government offices (bureaucrats also vote) that provide government services to the dependent. That concentrates society's parasites and bureaucrats in the big cities. Both groups naturally vote to perpetuate their gravy train. That turns the big-city map red. It disenfranchises those who pay for – not profit from – big government no matter where they live. It is not good.

So, I support a redistricting plan that breaks up the big cities with a goal of reducing the influence of voters who depend on big government. It looks to me like the "Rep. Sumsion_05" map does that best.

Or with Delta and other small towns, for that matter. Different areas = different demographics and economics and local ordinances.
Why not give District 4 more area to its south end and return south Salt Lake to Salt Lake City?I live in downtown SLC and I want to make sure the representative I vote for will be the same representative (most of) my neighbors vote for. If I move to a nearby zip code it makes sense that I could remain with the same representative. Splitting Salt Lake County into three division does not allow such a simple, reasonable concept.

The Legislature's Redistricting Committee asked voters for their views on re-mapping districts. The public responded with plenty of opinions, documented by public records, polls, surveys and citizen-created maps.

However, voter input conflicted with GOP strategy. The recently proposed Utah Senate and House maps reveal clear examples of protection of GOP incumbents at the cost of citizens in Tooele and Utah counties and northern Salt Lake City.

A common Republican response to citizen complaints is, "You can't make everyone happy." An ideal response is for legislators to actually strive to represent voters' views, even when it conflicts with their own.

Reportedly, some GOP legislators are now saying that if the public complaints about their job performance don't quiet down quickly, their motivation to cooperate with their Democratic colleagues will dwindle. Those are fighting words that motivate "good government" groups to challenge the ethical stance of Utah's public servants.

Public input this summer revealed a disturbing level of distrust in Republican leadership in Utah. Your final chance for voters to voice their opinion about the new districts that we will be living in for the next decade is Sept. 22, House Building Room 30, 9 a.m.

Although I'm sure that others would be very interested to know what he told me, as well, and although I'm sure that such information will spread anyway, I doubt that it would be appropriate to post such information on this website, due to the redistricting committee's official policy (whether for better or for worse) that this process ought to remain as free as possible from partisan concerns---and, so, in my efforts to respect this policy, I will decline to answer your question at this time on this website. With Utah being a Republican controlled state, making it more difficult for the Democrats in Utah to have a voice and some representation does not seem fair. What is your thought Mr. Garber?

Thank you, Ronoftuscany! I did my best to create a proposal that makes as much sense as possible geographically, and it seems that quite a few people believe that I succeeded. So far, my proposal's severest criticism has been exclusively about its partisan effects, which I didn't consider at all when I created this proposal, whether for better or for worse, due to the redistricting committee's policies. Some like Aaron Browning might forge these four districts in ways that make all four districts (equally) somewhat hard for Democrats to win, while others like me might unintentionally forge them in ways that make one district slightly hard for Democrats to win and another district extremely hard for Democrats to win and the other two something in between. I don't know which option will make Republicans or Democrats (or Utahns in general) happier or sadder, overall, or if this will even matter much in the long run. But I do want an outcome that will divide Utah in ways that make as much sense as possible for Utahns in general, and not in ways that significantly favor one party's (or county's) statistically-common interests above (or below) those of another. So, I'll join you in hoping for the best outcome. Thank you again!

There are too many people to have it in one district. 3. The districts have to have both urban and rural, That's just how the population is. All the districts need part of the Wasatch front in order to have enough people. All counties in the state except the 5 on the Wasatch Front (SL, Utah, Davis, Weber, and Cache) put together do not have enough people for one district.4. More than just SL county must be split. I just heard that there is a meeting tomorrow in Salt Lake. I cannot be there as I live in Vernal. I want to say that I am a simple person living in rural Utah. I feel that if you do the "doughnut" redistricting you would be unjust to those of us that live outside of the Wasatch front. We already feel alienated in many things because we live so far away from most of the meetings. When we add in our travel time to try and get our voice heard the meeting is already over and we were not heard. Why not have our state sliced up like a "pizza" at least we might have some representation and have a voice that will be heard. Even if we cannot make it to meetings, maybe our representative would live close enough to be able to go and be our voice. Please let the whole voice of Utah be heard. Let those of us that live outside of the Wasatch area have a voice that can make a difference when a voice needs to be heard. A pizza would do us a lot better than a doughnut. Please think about it if you lived in southern Utah and your voice is not heard and things were going against you. Your representation would be important to you like I would like my representation to be important to me. Think about in case you move to rural Utah and your representation changes because you voted for the doughnut, I don't think you would be happy. Just think about it please. Thank you for reading my comment.

But all the Democrats really want is a map so that they can get rid of Matheson as well. Those pesky moderate Democrats and Independents outside of Salt Lake County are the only thing that kept Claudia Wright from steamrolling him in the primary! My problem is that the Democrats don't really want a chance to get one or two congressional seats: they want a good shot at electing a radical wacko, and who cares if in the process they allow the Republicans to elect wing-nuts in the other three districts. Although I don't like this map very much, at least it makes two districts where there is a snowballs chance in hell of a moderate, of either party, being elected and even winning the general election.

David Edward Garber <DaveGarber1975@yahoo.com> wrote:

I've seen many U.S. Congressional redistricting proposals this summer that divide Utah into various "pizza slices" and/or "doughnut holes"---but I still prefer a regional division, instead, such as this one that I've proposed. It establishes one district for each cardinal direction---it creates a northern district (#1) for both Logan and Ogden/Layton to share, it creates a southern district (#4) for both Orem/Provo and St. George to share, and it then halves the remaining central Wendover-SLC-Vernal corridor into both a western district (#2) and an eastern district (#3) via a line that bisects SLC but otherwise roughly follows I-15 without splitting any other cities. So, to restate, these four districts would be:

* #1 for northern Utah (serving Ogden/Layton & Logan & the rural north);
* #2 for western Utah (serving NW SLC & western Salt Lake County & the Salt Flats);
* #3 for eastern Utah (serving SE SLC & eastern Salt Lake County & the Uintah Basin);
* #4 for southern Utah (serving Provo/Orem & St. George & the rural south).

These four proposed U.S. Congressional districts split only one city (namely Bountiful and SLC and Pleasant Grove) in each of three counties, while leaving all other 26 counties intact, which division is rather minimal, and could easily remain so minimal as these four districts' borders are readjusted every decade. These districts also generally keep every rural hinterland connected to its most appropriate urban center and, similarly, they consistently extend along major transportation routes rather than across impassible natural terrain, unlike various districts in most other proposals. These districts' shapes are far from gerrymandered but are more contiguous and/or compact than most.

Perhaps this proposal's greatest strength is that it is far kinder to rural Utahns than most other plans that I've seen, as it divides rural Utah about as rationally as it possibly can. For example, I've seen some other proposals that inexplicably assign whomever represents St. George to also represent faraway Snowville but not to represent nearby Kanab, which makes relatively little sense to me, as Kanabites' interests are far more connected with St.-Georgeans' interests than Snowviller's interests could ever be. Although I reside in the heart of Utah County, my location hasn't blinded me to the fact that Utah consists of far more than just its populous Wasatch Front.

So, that's my case in favor of this proposal that I've submitted. I'd appreciate any helpful suggestions for its improvement, so that I may perhaps submit an even better revision of it for further consideration. Thank you!

Utah's state Representative Brian King introduced another variant of this proposal (named "SB3002S07") as a bill in Utah's state legislature on October 4th. His variant draws simpler boundaries but splits more cities than mine does. You may view this proposal, along with its feedback, on this webpage:

http://www.redistrictutah.com/maps/sb3002s07

Brandon Plewe submitted another variant of my and King's proposal recently, which I like about as much as my own. It gives northern Salt Lake County to the eastern district, and northern Utah County to the western district, which keeps SLC whole (although it divides both Magna and WVC), splits Utah County among two rather than three districts, and lets Jason Chaffetz reside within the 3rd district (that he represents) for a change. You may view this plan, along with its feedback, on this webpage:

http://www.redistrictutah.com/maps/congress-plewe-king-modified-post-committee

Utah's official redistricting committee carefully discussed both my and King's variants on October 7th, and may discuss them again next week. I remain too poor and ill (for now) to drive to Utah's capitol to speak to this committee on behalf of my own proposal, but I encourage others who favor it to do so in my absence.

A good map is where all four districts are roughly as even as possible in their ratio of registered voters. Even distribution of voters helps eliminate the argument of gerrymandering. A bad map is where one district is considerably more "liberal" OR "conservative" than another. For example, currently district 1 is an R+21, District 2 is an R+15 and district 3 is an R+26. The current difference between districts is 11%. When you create a bigger disparity than already exists, it will be easy for people (Republicans and Democrats alike) to say that one of the districts was handcarved for a specific person, thus qualifying as being "Gerrymandered". However, since I doubt that anything will change to the map since the lines were drawn and mostly decided upon long before public imput was completed...

This unbalance is of concern as it appears to be a blatent attempt to break up the minority party's strong hold (blatent as you're dividing Salt Lake into four sections when the previous division of two didn't work). Even though, under any system due to population fluxuations, it is likely the Democrats of Utah would loose a seat, it's uncouth to blatently use your power to take it. That is not a government for the people, or even by the people. It's a blatent disregard of power and a scary misuse of it at that.

Additionaly, the pizza is of concern as there has been some funny voting highlighted in Paul Rolly's columns concerning Southern Utah elections- where a town had more register votes from it than the entire population... . I've tried to find the link, I have failed. Normally I would exclude this as it bad form to reference something without decent citation, however, time is limited for hunting for an outmoded link.

My wish for the future is to have an independent redistricting commission in the future which will get ride of these kinds of politics- and if either party looses a seat it is not due to obvious gerrymandering of the dominant party.

Thanks, VIGGOE! I'd love to reduce my short list of divided counties and/or cities from three to zero, but due to other considerations, three is about as good as I can do. And I think that SLC can handle it.

Salt Lake County is almost big enough for two districts and, as such, needs to be divided somehow. I experimented with some other ways of halving Salt Lake County, such as north-south or diagonally or something more meandering, all of which would leave SLC intact but likely split some other city, but I didn't feel as good about any of these alternatives as I did about this north-south division that splits SLC. I'm still open to alternatives, although I don't know whether the redistricting committee is or not.

By the way, I note that every semifinal proposal other than both mine and Steve Clark's divides Salt Lake County among four districts rather than among only two. These four other proposals divide Utah County less, though, unlike both mine and Steve Clark's, which divide Utah County among three districts.

The map was NOT designed to balance republican or democrat ratios. The redistricting map software doesn't even provide that information.

It should and does balance 2010 Census populations.

The stated public motive for drawing the "Hat and 3 Stripes" map that was started last November was to have equal US Census population and keep as many counties and cities together as possible. (Not splitting them).

This map might look pretty, but we must ask ourselves: what is the difference between a GOOD map and a BAD map? A good map is where all four districts are roughly as even as possible in their ratio of registered voters. Even distribution of voters helps eliminate the argument of gerrymandering. A bad map is where one district is considerably more "liberal" OR "conservative" than another. For example, currently district 1 is an R+21, District 2 is an R+15 and district 3 is an R+26. The current disparity between districts is 11%. When you create a bigger disparity than already exists, it will be easy for people (Republicans and Democrats alike) to say that one of the districts was handcarved for a specific person, thus qualifying as being "Gerrymandered". This map would create a disparity be...

The length is entirely dependent. We don't set a certain time for them to be over. However, if you cannot make it, we do stream the audio at www.le.utah.gov.

Hope this helps, and thanks for pointing out the time wasn't on there.

As a Republican, I reject this map as gerrymandering. Salt Lake County has enough population to merit a member of congress seated completely within its borders. Worse, District 2 combines downtown Salt Lake City with all of Southern Utah. To access the district via the I-15 corridor the member of Congress must pass through both the 3rd and 4th districts. We can and must do better that to conjoin distant communities when there are much better options which have been proposed.

Or with Delta and other small towns, for that matter. Different areas = different demographics and economics and local ordinances.Why not give District 4 more area to its south end and return south Salt Lake to Salt Lake City?I live in downtown SLC and I want to make sure the representative I vote for will be the same representative (most of) my neighbors vote for. If I move to a nearby zip code it makes sense that I could remain with the same representative. Splitting Salt Lake County into three division does not allow such a simple, reasonable concept.

It would be useful if the Republicans in Utah government took seriously that they are supposed to represent the PEOPLE and not just their own party. But then, they don't like referendums, cities or counties which act differently than they direct, or even the Federal government. In their own minds the government exists "by the Republicans, of the Republicans, and for the Republicans," and to hades with everyone else.

I grew up in a Republican/Independent household in the Midwest, but have long since realized that the Republican party these days is a far cry, and far worse, from what I knew as I grew up. I find it unfortunately typical of the current Republican party in Utah that a few years ago there were delegates at the Republican convention who heckled then Gov. Leavitt and called out that he was a Communist. Then there are the scandals about legislative members almost every session. It was amazing when a legislative leader resigned over past misdeeds and got a standing ovation for his work from the legislature when he announced his resignation.

Over my life I have seen that when one party controls the offices for a long time - WHICHEVER PARTY IT IS - abuses become rampant, whether they be the arrogance of power or outright corruption. This is a lesson which Utah voters have failed to recognize.

Sigh...

Dear Redistricting Committee - I hope you notice how many of you comments are "cut and paste" identical. I also believe that the Sumsion 6 map is fair and equitable. Our largest population area (Salt Lake County) would benefit from having 4 Reps who are concerned about it. Likewise, the more Reps who have a rural element in their districts, the more experience Reps will have to represent the rural interests. It is impossible to create a population based map without dividing communities but I believe the Sumsion 6 map does as well as it can. It has 0.00 variances and is supported by the principals expressed at all your rural meetings. Equitable distribution of land and population. Also keep in mind that in your comment periods in the rural areas you did not allocate time for all present to make comments. In Uintah your committee "specifically asked" how many in the room were in favor of a "Democrat donuthole" the answer was LOUD and CLEAR, in a room with over 100 people, one hand raised. So that should count for 100 public comments.

Thanks for the time you have spent on the redistricting issue. I made my own map so know it is not easy.

Respectfully,
Joni Crane

PS (We have been represented in Utah for the last 10 years as if 1/3 of our voters are Democrats, we have been OVER REPRESENTED. It is only fair that we have a FAIR CHANCE for Republicans to be fairly elected in all 4 districts)

As you finalize your proposal for Utah's newest U.S. Congressional districts, I hope that you will be kind to rural Utahns, even though only about one-fifth of Utahns live beyond Utah's populous Wasatch Front. I've examined so many redistricting proposals, both from concerned citizens and from committee members, that (sadly) seem to needlessly forge careless arbitrary connections between Utah's rural towns and its urban centers; for example, some proposals cause St. Georgians to share their U.S. Representative with faraway Snowvillers but not with nearby Kanabites, which makes little sense to me. In my four proposals, by contrast, I strove diligently to divide Utah as sanely as possible into four sensible contiguous geographic regions---and I think that these four proposals divide rural Utah, especially, about as rationally as possible. I feel especially pleased with my Plan D. In any case, I hope that your committee will carefully consider these (and similar) proposals seriously, if it has not done so already. Thank you!

There are times for steadfastness and there are times for compromise. It's always wrong to compromise our clean conscience to sin and/or our innate rights (to life, property, contract, et cetera) to tyranny; this is rather like negotiating with a murderer for a mutilation, instead. But redistricting is a matter in which compromise is generally exceptionally appropriate.

I favor a compromise that will serve the general interests of all Utahns equally, rather than the special interests of their politicians and/or parties unequally, and I suspect that King's proposal here may be such a compromise---or, at least, one that's about as close to this ideal as Utah's public can possibly get without their legislature rejecting it.

There are many reasons why I don't like this map. It doesn't even try to keep counties together, Salt Lake County will fit in two districts so there is no reason to divide it into three. Utah County could be in one district but it is divided. My biggest concern is that the hole district has the some of the biggest growth cities in the State. In only a few years it could be a unbalanced with a bigger population then the other districts if growth continues in western Salt lake County and western Utah County as it has the last decade. Since I live in South Jordan this is a big concern for me.

What a joke.

I particularly like that the northern counties that are contiguous are in one district as are the counties along the Uintahs. There is poor at best access from north to south in Eastern Utah and this plan acknowledges the fact. the same goes for Western Utah where access from Box Elder to Tooele counties is poor.

THIS IS THE WORST MAP TO DATE. Sanpete County is divided into 3 districts again. Towns are divided and what does north Sanpete have in common with half of Price? Especially when there is a water war between them. And Gunnison is separate from Mayfield, Manti, Ephraim...etc. and west of highway 89 is placed with people over the mountain in Millard - No chance for any local representation ever - just like it has been for over 20 years. Ephrain is divided in half. A child with a crayon would have done a better job drawing the lines.

It appears that most house members are in office for the wrong reason and their only interest is insuring their own positions. It smacks of Republican party selfish wrangling over more seats - Price City cut in half? Is that so that there aren't any more democrats allowed in office? wow!

House Speaker Lockhart - show some real leadership here. This does not make sense - turn this job over to citizens - they could do it. Get it out of the grubby hands of the Republican Party leadership and those in office that are protecting their seats. Fairness and reasonable representation should be your objective in this process.

Yes, it can be argued that SLC is gerrymandered if you are ignorant and just look at the map. The fact is that if you divided up everything based solely on geography, then SLC and other big cities would be hugely under-represented, since most of the state is rural. That's why you have to go off of population. The divisions made manage to have almost equal populations with a fair representation of both rural and urban in each zone. If the democrats think that they should have a single urban SLC district all their own, then they'd best have more babies because the population just doesn't justify it.

In only a few years it could be a unbalanced with a bigger population then the other districts if growth continues in western Salt lake County and western Utah County as it has the last decade. Since I live in South Jordan this is a big concern for me.

Absolutely correct, Miguel. May I also point out that redistricting is going on in all 50 states right now, and that states with heavy Democratic majorities are just as busy gerrymandering Republicans out of existence. You would really be a happier person if you moved to one of those states. If you want to see some colossal gerrymandering, you should see some of the districts drawn in other states to assure the election of black and hispanic candidates. Such states make this Utah map look totally logical.

Furthermore, I think you don't know what "teabagging" is, or you wouldn't put your name over such a comment. I claim association with the TEA Party movement. The unifying principle of the TEA Party is that we are all alarmed by the ruination perpetrated on our national economy by deficit spending. We are absolutely livid about the times when Democrats promised to cut spending if Republicans would do their part by voting for a chunky tax increase first, then watching Democrats ignore their promise and just keep on increasing spending. That's why the TEA party wants only spending cuts this time.

For decades, Democrats controlled Congress via satisfying a loose coalition of interests which demanded federal funding of their programs. The coalition comes apart when that can no longer be done. As we watch European democratic socialist nations fall apart as they run out of other peoples' money to spend, we become painfully aware that, unless we get control of our deficit situation, we will follow them on the road to ruin and dictatorship. The TEA party rises in response to this urgent situation. Of course, you will point out that Bush 43 (41 too, FYI) did their share of deficit spending. There was plenty of complaint from conservatives then. Our current president and his congressional allies have pushed spending beyond sustainability. The TEA party exists to bring sense to Republicans or to start a third party.

You need to drop the "teabagging" thing. I'd flag that for obscenity if this site had flags.

Follow the votes! Follow the money!

Approximately 2,084,000 Utahns live in Weber, Davis, Salt Lake, and Utah counties. That is about 75.4% of the total.

The remaining 680,000 Utahns (24.6%) live in "rural" areas.

Do you really, really think that congressional representatives are going to give the 170,000 rural Utahns in their districts (~25% of the 24.6%) the attention they need and deserve compared to the potential votes and especially the potential campaign contributions from the 521,000 potential voters in the urban and suburban precincts?

Members of the legislature need to wake up and smell the Postum-like morning beverage. The "pizza slice" approach is the worst possible scenario for Utahns living in rural areas. Utah's approximately 680,000 rural residents ought to have their own district and a member of congress completely focused on their issues, as would be the case with this map.

What part of "keep communities of interest together" is so fluffing hard for people to understand?

I can deal with this map, though I definitely liked the Original Garber map over this revision. I specifically spot a lot of problems in Utah County. Payson and Salem are in separate districts, and those cities are more like two halves of a whole than anything. Same thing with Spanish Fork - Springville - Mapleton.And again in American Fork - Lehi. And why chop North Salt Lake off from the rest of Davis County? Also, though I don't think splitting Salt Lake County along I-15 (as Garber's original map does) is ideal for many reasons, I find that far preferable than the strange split down 13th West that this map does.

Essentially, I can see that this map is being offered as a compromise map; however, the original Garber map is much better than this revision. Everything that his map changes only serves to map the Garber map worse, not better.

With that all said, even with these annoying revisions, this map is still leaps and bounds ahead of most every other map that has been discussed or passed. It is clearly non-political for either side, splits up the districts in obvious cultural and geographical areas, has small and compact districts that are easy to get around, and doesn't royally screw over rural Utah nearly as bad.

I think my biggest complaint about this map is lumping southern Utah in with Utah County, but that's something that just simply can't be avoided, there's not enough population to give them their own district. Oh well, we've still got the 2022 redistricting, hopefully southern Utah can get their own district then.

I've been very vocal in my support of this map. The reasons I prefer it are clearly stated here:

Subject: [redistrictutah] Re: Congress: David Edward Garber "Garber Plan"

David Edward Garber <DaveGarber1975@yahoo.com> wrote:

I've seen many U.S. Congressional redistricting proposals this year that divide Utah into various "pizza slices" and "doughnut holes" and such---but I still prefer a simple regional division, instead, such as this one that I've proposed.

My plan's most basic premise is that Utah should establish one regional district for each cardinal direction---or, more specifically, that it should create a northern district (#1) for both Ogden and Logan to share, that it should create a southern district (#3) for both Provo and St. George to share, and that it should then halve the remaining central Wendover-SLC-Vernal corridor into both a western district (#4) and an eastern district (#2) via a line that bisects SLC but otherwise roughly follows I-15 without splitting any other cities. So, to restate, I propose that Utah's four U.S. Congressional districts should be:

* #1 for northern Utah (serving Ogden/Layton & Logan & the rural north);
* #4 for western Utah (serving NW SLC & western Salt Lake County & the Salt Flats);
* #2 for eastern Utah (serving SE SLC & eastern Salt Lake County & the Uintah Basin);
* #3 for southern Utah (serving Provo/Orem & St. George & the rural south).

These four districts (as I've suggested mapping them) would split only one city (namely Bountiful and SLC and Pleasant Grove) in each of three counties (namely Davis and Salt Lake and Utah), while leaving all other 26 Utahn counties united, which division is rather minimal, and could easily remain so minimal as these districts' borders are readjusted every decade. Their shapes are about as compact as possible. Moreover, unlike most alternatives, they generally keep every rural hinterland connected to its most appropriate urban center and, similarly, they consistently extend along major transportation routes rather than across impassible natural terrain. This is because I think that it's irrational for any district to contain distinct areas that are less transportationally-linked with each other than with neighboring districts---so, I invariably sought to forge districts around what unites people (like highways) rather than what divides them (like canyons).

Salt Lake County has grown far too populous for a single district, but it is nearly populous enough for two, and so it seemed logical to me to halve it between two. Although I experimented with various ways to halve this capital county, none made as much sense to me as a simple longitudinal division between its west bench and its east bench. Because Salt Lake City spans both benches, and is so vast, it seemed best to me to restrict any municipal division to SLC alone, while leaving all other Salt Lake Valley cities intact. Some SLC residents may not enjoy having their city split in twain as I am proposing, but may feel comforted to note that this proposal still keeps every SLC neighborhood intact except Ball Park (and not Rose Park), and thereby bisects Salt Lake City about as cleanly as possible.

Both Davis County and Utah County, like Salt Lake County between them, have populaces that are divided by this proposal---but, unlike in Salt Lake County, MOST of their respective residents remain together within a single non-SLC-centered district, rather than being separated roughly-equally among two. Although I experimented with different means of dividing these two counties, I couldn't identify any means that seemed better than what I proposed here, which causes both Bountiful and Pleasant Grove to span adjacent districts. As with urban Salt Lake City, I strove to divide these two borderline suburban cities about as cleanly as possible. I'd prefer to keep both of these two populous counties enitrely intact, but required populational parameters prevent this unless I weirdly divide rural Utah, instead, which I don't believe is worth this price.

Perhaps this proposal's greatest strength is that it is far kinder to rural Utahns than most other plans that I've seen, as it divides rural Utah about as rationally as it possibly can. For example, I've seen some other proposals that inexplicably assign whomever represents St. George to also represent faraway Snowville but not to represent nearby Kanab, which makes relatively little sense to me, as Kanabites' interests are far more connected with St.-Georgeans' interests than Snowviller's interests could ever be. Although I reside in the heart of Utah County, my location hasn't blinded me to the fact that Utah consists of far more than just its populous Wasatch Front. And, in every one of my proposals, I strove not to favor any Utahn region's statistically-common interests either above or below those of others.

Some Utahns may also like how each of these proposed districts includes some rural land (including federal land), plus at least one area whose population is currently growing rapidly. I note that Utah's military bases spread among three of these four districts, whether for better or for worse. And that Utah's Native American reservations are similarly dispersed among three of these four districts, although I've been informed that their residents would generally prefer to be collected into one---but I obviously can't please everyone. As for such special interests, I think that citizens usually compromise more readily for plans that they perceive don't carelessly conglomerate precincts but, rather, carefully assemble them according to a sound rationale. In general, I believe that this quad-regional proposal makes about as much geographic sense as possible, although some may criticize it for its partisan effects (which I was not permitted to consider while drafting it).

So, that's my case in favor of this proposal that I've submitted. I've previously submitted two variants of it (namely "Garber CDs B" and "Garber CDs D") that had minor errors, which this version corrects, and Brian King has now submitted his own variant of it. I'd appreciate any helpful suggestions for its further refinement (such as whether these districts are better numbered north-southward or north-clockwise), so that I may perhaps submit an even better revision of it for further consideration. Although I'd like to believe that its logic will speak for itself, we should not depend upon this with our state legislators, especially since some of them seem to like to favor their peers' (or party's) interests above ours. So, if you prefer this proposal, then please express your support (1) on this webpage, (2) to Utah's official redistricting committee (via redistrictutah@utah.gov), and (3) to your respective state legislators---and please invite others to do so, as well. Thank you!

I just finished a revision of this map that corrects the issues raised in Friday's hearing:
- It unifies Salt Lake City (in the East district)
- It unifies all of northern Utah County (UC is only 2 districts) in the West District
- It goes back to city limits through most of Salt Lake Valley
- It puts Chaffetz and Matheson in separate districts
Only downside is that I had to separate the Chesterfield neighborhood off of WVC.

I submitted it, but it's not on the website (and likely never will be). In the redistricting tool, it is #66006.

Approximately 2,084,000 Utahns live in Weber, Davis, Salt Lake, and Utah counties. That is about 75.4% of the total.

The remaining 680,000 Utahns (24.6%) live in "rural" areas.

Do you really, really think that congressional representatives are going to give 170,000 Utahns the attention they need and deserve compared to the potential votes and especially the potential campaign contributions from the 521,000 potential voters in the urban and suburban precincts?

Wake up and smell the Postum-like morning beverage. The "pizza slice" approach is the worst possible scenario for Utahns living in rural areas.

Utah's approximately 680,000 rural residents NEED and DESERVE their own district and a member of congress completely focused on their issues.

So, after 6 months of public comment, about 20 meetings across the state, it comes down to a map that most people wouldn't even use to wipe their &$$ with. The public is the ultimate loser. I am getting so sick of everyone on that damn committee trying to justify everything as "well it comports to one man one vote". Really? If it didn't you would be sued so quit pretending like you are doing anyone a favor holding to a stupid standard that was never in question to begin with. It is now and always has been about communities of interest... and those communities are going to be pissed. Salt Lake City does not want a guy who gives standing ovations to child molesters like Dave Clark did last year to represent them in Congress. He doesn't have OUR VALUES, but what he does have is enough votes to win our seat. If you ask the people of Salt Lake County if they think it was a good idea to make every woman who has a flipping miscarriage a suspect in a 2nd degree felony manslaughter case, they would probably tell you it is a bad idea. Yet, the genius who made that law, Carl Wimmer, had a district custom carved out for him to represent us in Congress? Thinking that a miscarriage is the same as murder is not part of OUR VALUES. Both Wimmer and Clark have very hard line views which are not compatible with the personal, spiritual, or collective needs of Utah. However, because of how this map is drawn they will be elected and you know it, and that is why you drew the map like this. Throw a bone to Carl, and get Clark out of your hair.Don't even get me started on how this map conveniently splits all the counties which don't have LDS majorities into different districts. While that seems like a good idea to you now, this decade is going to see the first time in Utah history where those who are LDS will not be in the majority of the population. By 2031, they will no longer hold a voting majority either. How are they going to remember you? Will they remember that you respected them, that you allowed them representation? Or will they be thinking about they were marginalized? Do unto others as they would do unto you. Is that how you want to spend your golden years, marginalized?The Republican Party and Democratic Party are not so different. All either party does is complain about Jim Matheson. If you get rid of him though, all you are doing is putting the spot light on yourself. Something tells me that at the end of the day, you don't want that. This is a bad map and deep down you know it.

This map is disgusting, and it's a pure sham that the people of Utah have to put up with the horrendous gerrymandering attempt (and likely success) on part of the Dear Party.

The point of the donut hole proposal was to keep together the urban communities, NOT to split them up however it pleases the Dear Party.

Notice that of the districts, it seems as if we have one perfectly crafted for Rob Bishop (a stated goal of the committee earlier, as Bishop apparently is "great" on energy issues, so we had to make sure that he had a perfectly crafted district). There is another district that just SCREAMS "Oh Jason! Dear Rep. Chaffetz!" And the worst of all is the grotesque take on a donut hole that looks hand-drawn by Carl Wimmer.

Strange, it looks almost as if the committee purposely did everything they could to specifically target Jim Matheson. Again! But they did everything possible to craft perfect little districts for anyone with an (R) after their name.

I'd say I'm shocked, but it would be a lie. I am disgusted and appalled though.

I hoped that all maps were non-politically influenced. My concern is that Utah is unevenly Republican and conservative and other Utahans have all but lost their voice on important governmental and societal issues.

I hope that the Redistricting Committee will select a redistricting map that is non-partisan, even, fair to registered voters and is Not gerrymandered.

Let's hope for the best outcome.

Thank you.

You're welcome, Kim! I didn't even consider federal lands when I drew this proposal, but it assigns some to each U.S. Representative's district, anyway, which seems to be important to some people. And, as Salt Lake County is almost populous enough for two whole districts, it only made sense to me to halve it this way, so that its east and west benches each have their own respective district. If you like, then please share such praise with both your state legislators and Utah's official redistricting committee (via redistrictutah@utah.gov), and invite others to do so, as well---and to post their comments here, as you have done. Snaking a district from Iron County through three other counties into northern Tooele County to take the other part of Grantsville and north Stansbury Park? Is this a joke just to get a reaction and then thumb your noses at us? Is there no sense of honor or integrity on this Legislative Redistricting Committee? This map is completely unprincipled--a blatant incumbent power grab. Unfortunately, until we get an independent redistricting commission, this is the kind of garbage legislators will put out. Centerville, Bountiful, Cottonwood Heights and Murray are all in four different congressional districts. That's just one of the few things about this map that makes absolutely no sense. Salt Lake City has very little in common with St. George. Moab and Sandy don't share common interests. The citizens of Utah have been screaming about keeping their communities together and this map completely disregards that. Anyone who is an ethical lawmaker, Democrat or Republican, would draw logical maps without regard to incumbents or political affiliation -- apparently we don't have many of those in this state.

Representation is more than numbers. This proposed plan leaves Wasatch County with no effective representation. For many years Wasatch County has been aligned with Duchesne County and with the common interests we have , have had very good representation from individuals in both Counties. Dividing an already small population County into smaller pieces and aligning with a different area with totally different cultural ideals seems like an afterthought after addressing other areas of the State. Please do not take away Wasatch County's representation. Dividing small communitites is very unfair.

So, to restate, these four proposed new U.S. Congressional districts would be roughly:

* #1: northern Utah (serving Ogden/Layton & Logan & the rural north)

* #2: western Utah (serving NW SLC & western Salt Lake County & the Salt Flats)

* #3: eastern Utah (serving SE SLC & eastern Salt Lake County & the Uintah Basin)

* #4: southern Utah (serving Provo/Orem & St. George & the rural south)

I think that this proposal gives each district a nice mixture of both urban and rural areas.

Sarcasm aside, I know all y'all have rationalized your behavior to yourselves. However, you're not doing us any favors. We would like to think we'll get fair representation in the lege, but these kinds of shenanigans are only going to satisfy the party partisans. Some of you I know personally, so I'll tell you: I'm very disappointed.

Dear Committee:
Mr. David Garber suggested a map that makes a lot of geographical sense in the way that he linkined geographic regions together into districts for a Northern Utah district, a west-central Utah district, an east-central district, and a southern Utah district. It appears to be a map that would sensibly link high-density areas with neighboring low density areas in each district without splitting up a district, thus making more travel-sense for a congressman and more representational-sense as well since many concerns would be shared in the suggested districts.
Sincerely,
Mr. Bliss Tew- Orem

One more comment, this one regarding State Legislative distrcits. If Utah is to be a Republican form of government, it would sure make more sense to return to Utah State Senatorial districts that were simply a district for each of the 29 counties so that counties are represented on an equal basis in the Utah State Senate.

As we see in the federal republic, each state, no matter how large or small in population or geography has equal representation in the senate. So too should each county in the state of Utah have equal representation in the Utah State Senate.

The Legislature's Redistricting Committee asked voters for their views on re-mapping districts. The public responded with plenty of opinions, documented by public records, polls, surveys and citizen-created maps.

However, voter input conflicted with GOP strategy. The recently proposed Utah Senate and House maps reveal clear examples of protection of GOP incumbents at the cost of citizens in Tooele and Utah counties and northern Salt Lake City.

A common Republican response to citizen complaints is, "You can't make everyone happy." An ideal response is for legislators to actually strive to represent voters' views, even when it conflicts with their own.

Reportedly, some GOP legislators are now saying that if the public complaints about their job performance don't quiet down quickly, their motivation to cooperate with their Democratic colleagues will dwindle. Those are fighting words that motivate "good government" groups to challenge the ethical stance of Utah's public servants.

Public input this summer revealed a disturbing level of distrust in Republican leadership in Utah. Your final chance for voters to voice their opinion about the new districts that we will be living in for the next decade is Sept. 22, House Building Room 30, 9 a.m.

Mixing urban and rural areas in each district, as this appears to do, muddies the interests, and will muddle the voice of our congressional representation. I strongly urge you to keep Salt Lake County, Utah County and Davis/Weber Counties whole to the greatest extent possible. Playing politics with these boundary lines continues to weaken our political system, as shown by the consistent decline in voter turnout over the last three-four decades. Your first responsibility should be to Country, and the health and integrity of our Democracy, not to Party.

I strongly believe that communities should be kept intact as much as possible. Also, it is unfair to all to combine rural and urban areas as each has their voice compromised. Rural Utah - outside of the Wasatch Front and possibly the Wasatch Back should make up a single district so that they will have one strong voice in congress who can represent their viewpoint. The populated areas should have the remaining three districts centered around Salt Lake City, Provo-Orem and Ogden/Davis County.
For the Utah Senate neighborhoods should be kept intact so each neighborhood individual has a good chance of knowing their Senator. Again, rural and urban interests should each be in their own Senate District. That way people with like-minded views will be represented by a Senator who shares that view.
Thank you.

Let those of us that live outside of the Wasatch area have a voice that can make a difference when a voice needs to be heard. A pizza would do us a lot better than a doughnut. Please think about it if you lived in southern Utah and your voice is not heard and things were going against you. Your representation would be important to you like I would like my representation to be important to me. Think about in case you move to rural Utah and your representation changes because you voted for the doughnut, I don't think you would be happy. Just think about it please. Redistricting Committee:

As you finalize your proposal for Utah's newest U.S. Congressional districts, I hope that you will be kind to rural Utahns, even though only about one-fifth of Utahns live beyond Utah's populous Wasatch Front. I've examined so many redistricting proposals, both from concerned citizens and from committee members, that (sadly) seem to needlessly forge careless arbitrary connections between Utah's rural towns and its urban centers; for example, some proposals cause St. Georgians to share their U.S. Representative with faraway Snowvillers but not with nearby Kanabites, which makes little sense to me. In my four proposals, by contrast, I strove diligently to divide Utah as sanely as possible into four sensible contiguous geographic regions---and I think that these four proposals divide rural Utah, especially, about as rationally as possible. I feel especially pleased with my Plan D. In any case, I hope that your committee will carefully consider these (and similar) proposals seriously, if it has not done so already. Thank you!

I respectfully ask that the state senate base map be revised to place west Provo in a state senate district with our sister Provo / Orem communities, not leave us disenfranchised in a rural district like we have been for the past 10 years.

West Provo has spent the last 10 years in a state senate district (Dist 13) that was divided from the rest of Provo, and if the current map prevails we will once again be disenfranchised from the rest of our Provo community. West Provo is slated to be placed into a southern Utah County state senate district that includes rural interests such as Benjamin, Elk Ridge, and West Mountain. We do not share many similarities with other cities in the new district, which will leave us struggling to have our voices heard among the many other interests within the new district.

The base map EAST Provo / Orem senate seat used to be encompassed fully within Utah County, but will now cross county lines. *Please shift the senate seats west so that the east seat is fully within Utah County and the west seat includes west Provo (also fully within Utah County). *

Provo/Orem are the heart and center of Utah County. Please keep Orem/Provo together and fully within Utah County so that our similar interests can be more fully represented in the state senate.

Not bad.
It doesn't leave much rural area in the Utah County district (pink). It does look like it splits at least Lehi and Spanish Fork in half. What if you took the rest of Lehi out of blue and put it in the pink and rest of Spanish Fork out of the pink and into the blue. Would it still balance the numbers?

Looks like Fruit Heights and Kaysville also get some strange splits, but I don't know that area as well.

For me it's paramount to make sure that all districts are balanced, urban and rural, and that cities aren't split.

Please stop dividing cities in half. Cities need a unified voice. They can't do this well if they have little power because their votes are split between several representatives. A perfect example of this in in Sumsion_06. Why would you use Redwood Road as a boundary (Which splits Saratoga Springs into 3 districts!) instead of the city boundaries. Are you trying to ensure that not one of our representatives pays attention to our residents?

Also, all senate districts should have a balance of urban and rural to ensure that these areas receive equal attention. The doughnut plan is a terrible idea where a representative doesn't have to pay attention to rural issues and urban issues, as well as federal land issues. It is very short sighted.

Please stop dividing cities in half. Cities need a unified voice. They can't do this well if they have little power because their votes are split between several representatives. A perfect example of this in in Sumsion_06. Why would you use Redwood Road as a boundary (Which splits Saratoga Springs into 3 districts!) instead of the city boundaries. Are you trying to ensure that not one of our representatives pays attention to our residents?Also, all senate districts should have a balance of urban and rural to ensure that these areas receive equal attention. The doughnut plan is a terrible idea where a representative doesn't have to pay attention to rural issues and urban issues, as well as federal land issues. It is very short sighted.

Dear Redistricting Committee - I hope you notice how many of you comments are "cut and paste" identical. I also believe that the Sumsion 6 map is fair and equitable. Our largest population area (Salt Lake County) would benefit from having 4 Reps who are concerned about it. Likewise, the more Reps who have a rural element in their districts, the more experience Reps will have to represent the rural interests. It is impossible to create a population based map without dividing communities but I believe the Sumsion 6 map does as well as it can. It has 0.00 variances and is supported by the principals expressed at all your rural meetings. Equitable distribution of land and population. Also keep in mind that in your comment periods in the rural areas you did not allocate time for all present to make comments. In Uintah your committee "specifically asked" how many in the room were in favor of a "Democrat donuthole" the answer was LOUD and CLEAR, in a room with over 100 people, one hand raised. So that should count for 100 public comments.

Thanks for the time you have spent on the redistricting issue. I made my own map so know it is not easy.

Respectfully,
Joni Crane

PS (We have been represented in Utah for the last 10 years as if 1/3 of our voters are Democrats, we have been OVER REPRESENTED. It is only fair that we have a FAIR CHANCE for Republicans to be fairly elected in all 4 districts)

And I need to add a few more thoughts: I have to agree with R Myatt. I also looked at the population numbers that were followed in making up the districts - pretty darn equal in population size so that each person has the same "representation" in each district. Putting "like" ethnicity or cultures in one district may not be feasible without drastically lowering the population numbers in one district and increasing the numbers in another or by creating such twisty curvy districrs that determining district lines would be fairly impossible. Yes, Utah's population has grown in 10 years so we gained another congressional seat, but we have also experienced population shifts within our state. The population in the southwest corner of Salt Lake County is growing. There is still much land to be developed into beautiful communities such as DayBreak - thus more families will be moving west. The west side of Utah Lake is more heavily populated now than 10 years ago. In another 10 years, the district encompassing the west sides of Salt Lake and Utah Counties may grow smaller in land area and the district encompasing Salt Lake City proper and the east side communities may grow larger in areas. Obviously this would occur to accommodate population shifts. Change is inevitable, and as Obama will tell you, the man who rules writes the rules.

David Edward Garber <DaveGarber1975@yahoo.com> wrote:

I've seen many U.S. Congressional redistricting proposals this summer that divide Utah into various "pizza slices" and/or "doughnut holes"---but I still prefer a regional division, instead, such as this one that I've proposed. It establishes one district for each cardinal direction---it creates a northern district (#1) for both Logan and Ogden/Layton to share, it creates a southern district (#4) for both Orem/Provo and St. George to share, and it then halves the remaining central Wendover-SLC-Vernal corridor into both a western district (#2) and an eastern district (#3) via a line that bisects SLC but otherwise roughly follows I-15 without splitting any other cities. So, to restate, these four districts would be:

* #1 for northern Utah (serving Ogden/Layton & Logan & the rural north);
* #2 for western Utah (serving NW SLC & western Salt Lake County & the Salt Flats);
* #3 for eastern Utah (serving SE SLC & eastern Salt Lake County & the Uintah Basin);
* #4 for southern Utah (serving Provo/Orem & St. George & the rural south).

These four proposed U.S. Congressional districts split only one city (namely Bountiful and SLC and Pleasant Grove) in each of three counties, while leaving all other 26 counties intact, which division is rather minimal, and could easily remain so minimal as these four districts' borders are readjusted every decade. These districts also generally keep every rural hinterland connected to its most appropriate urban center and, similarly, they consistently extend along major transportation routes rather than across impassible natural terrain, unlike various districts in most other proposals. These districts' shapes are far from gerrymandered but are more contiguous and/or compact than most.

Perhaps this proposal's greatest strength is that it is far kinder to rural Utahns than most other plans that I've seen, as it divides rural Utah about as rationally as it possibly can. For example, I've seen some other proposals that inexplicably assign whomever represents St. George to also represent faraway Snowville but not to represent nearby Kanab, which makes relatively little sense to me, as Kanabites' interests are far more connected with St.-Georgeans' interests than Snowviller's interests could ever be. Although I reside in the heart of Utah County, my location hasn't blinded me to the fact that Utah consists of far more than just its populous Wasatch Front.

So, that's my case in favor of this proposal that I've submitted. I'd appreciate any helpful suggestions for its improvement, so that I may perhaps submit an even better revision of it for further consideration. Thank you!

I like this proposal for the same reasons that I like my own. As best as I can tell, its main differences from mine are that its northern district gains both Summit County and Daggett County from its eastern district, its eastern/western districts extend further northward into southern Davis County rather than splitting SLC quite as much, and its eastern district gains southeastern Utah so that its southern district may extend further northward into American Fork. I still prefer my own division of rural Utah to this one, but I still like this one a lot.

I think that its boundary between its gray "hat" and blue "stripe" doesn't make as much sense as it could, and would do better to be more horizontal. Also, the Salt Flats don't connect well with southwestern Utah, and the Uintah Basin doesn't connect well with southeastern Utah, and (in general) I don't think that it links both rural and urban areas together as sensibly as, say, my own proposal, which I still favor. But this one is alright. And I can't help but like its colors.

THIS IS THE WORST MAP TO DATE. Sanpete County is divided into 3 districts again. Towns are divided and what does north Sanpete have in common with half of Price? Especially when there is a water war between them. And Gunnison is separate from Mayfield, Manti, Ephraim...etc. and west of highway 89 is placed with people over the mountain in Millard - No chance for any local representation ever - just like it has been for over 20 years. Ephrain is divided in half. A child with a crayon would have done a better job drawing the lines.

It appears that most house members are in office for the wrong reason and their only interest is insuring their own positions. It smacks of Republican party selfish wrangling over more seats - Price City cut in half? Is that so that there aren't any more democrats allowed in office? wow!

House Speaker Lockhart - show some real leadership here. This does not make sense - turn this job over to citizens - they could do it. Get it out of the grubby hands of the Republican Party leadership and those in office that are protecting their seats. Fairness and reasonable representation should be your objective in this process.

I made no conscious effort to both identify and target "progressive" cities for division as some sort of weird punishment, but I can understand if you don't merely take my word for it. Perhaps my reasons were a bit arbitrary, but I chose to keep every county intact except for Davis and Salt Lake and Utah, chose to minimize municipal divisions, chose to extend this southern district only up the eastern side of Utah Lake, and chose to let massive SLC alone straddle two districts in Salt Lake County, and such decisions led to these splits falling where they did.

I already displeased a Republican, as well, because of how this proposal would affect Jim Matheson's reelection prospects, but I wasn't thinking about such concerns when I drew these boundaries.

Agreed, Brent, and I feel pleased that you noticed this. All of my proposals seemed to pay more attention than many others' to both natural terrain and transportation routes. If a given district contains areas that are less connected (by transportation) with each other than they are with neighboring districts, then that seems rather irrational to me. It's not always possible to divide Utah perfectly in this respect, but I strove to approach such perfection as nearly as I could in every one of my proposals.

You request public comment, but you obviously don't read or care about the comments. Is this just a game to keep the public occupied? Districts 68 and 73 are completely irrational. Splitting little Grantsville in two and placing part in a district with Helper? Do you realize where Helper is? Four counties to the southeast! Snaking a district from Iron County through three other counties into northern Tooele County to take the other part of Grantsville and north Stansbury Park? Is this a joke just to get a reaction and then thumb your noses at us? Is there no sense of honor or integrity on this Legislative Redistricting Committee? This map is completely unprincipled--a blatant incumbent power grab. Unfortunately, until we get an independent redistricting commission, this is the kind of garbage legislators will put out. And you claimed you could do a better job than an independent commission. Wrong! I urge all citizens of both parties to vote against all legislators, of both parties, who vote for this map!

This map demonstrates that, in the end, what trumps any principle is protection of incumbents. Drawing a line through the Great Salt Lake from Brigham City into Tooele County, around several other closer population centers in Weber and Davis Counties, just to provide enough voters to fill Sen. Knudsen's district is the very definition of "gerrymander." Then look at the crooked line extended around Sen. Thatcher's house in West Valley City to include him in the district that extends out to Wendover and Dugway. For the next ten years, you again effectively deny the seventh largest county in the state a resident senator. No, we are not "the center of the universe," but we expected and hoped for better than this.

sanpeteman <stevec@cut.net> wrote:

With all due respect, this map goes completely out of whack as soon as it crosses the south Utah County line. District 67 is rediculously gerrymandered to continue to guarantee that the incumbent, (Rep. Painter, Mona) will have no serious competition even though his home county (Juab) is the smallest of the three counties included in this proposed district. How in the world does it make sense to reach all the way up to the northern end of Tooele county to get enough population for this district when it can be had so much more senseably, compactly, and logically by simply combining Sanpete and Juab into a single district? The numbers are perfect for that. I know it works because I and others have submitted maps that do exactly that.

It defies logic that this district needs to run in a narrow, very sparcely populated, illogical corridor that reaches clear up to northern Tooele County to collect enough population when the very population it needs is sitting on the door step in one of the counties the district is already proposed to be comprised of. The only logical explaination for such an artificial construct is that someone with a vested interest wants to see that this district is kept as non-competitive with tiny Juab as possible.

We thank the Committee for separating Sanpete and Carbon Counties as we requested. But if Sanpete must be divided, we urge the House to consider drawing the line further south and eliminating the gerrymandered north end of this proposed district that will serve to only anger and alienate the citizens of Sanpete and Tooele counties against any candidate that may emerge from Juab County, simply as a matter of principal. Respectfully...

It will only take a couple of years for some of these districts to be GIANT again. I'm talking about parts of Washington County, SW Salt Lake Valley, NW Utah County, etc. The allowed 3.5% variance is only 1,300 residents. Those margins will be made up in a matter of 1-2 years in the faster-growing areas.

It would make so much more sense to leave Grantsville together with the rural parts of Tooele County and combine Nephi with Delta, Ephraim, and Manti. The district that stretches from northern Tooele County to Iron County is anything but compact. Reason and fairness have been thrown to the wind. This map is "Exhibit A" to show why legislators should not be drawing their own districts. The result is senseless, power-hungry, self-serving madness. I can only hope the Governor steps in with a veto.

integrity is far more important than numbers. With the allowed 3?%
deviation flexibility more communities could remain intact. The Census figure are already history and have certainly changed since the count.

With that flexibility, if not maintaining intact communities, you might at least be able to align some of the Senate and legislative boundaries. For example, Wasatch County is divided in the Senate along 2400 S and in the House along Center St.

County integrity, at least, should be retained where feasible.

My children will not qualify for the gifted programs in education that they currently attend if grouped with Davis County. Our West Little League Football may cease to exist if all of these little football players are sent to Davis County. Our students who have pride in attending West High who all of a sudden find themselves now living in Davis County. What happens to them? How far will they have to travel to attend high school? Our Rose Park community needs to remain in Salt Lake County. Please do not divide us. Please do not send us to Davis County. We do not belong there.

I like this map, more so than the Senate Base Plan Map. Boundaries seem much more compact. Tooele is intact and includes Juab and other common interest communities. Salt Lake County districts are more compact, including West Valley. West Salt Lake City is whole. I am not sure if West SLC and North Salt Lake are common communities of interest, but if they are, this is good for their representation. I-15 clearly separates, without confusion, Senate districts in Washington County.

More cities and towns seem to be kept together, although I have not run metrics on this.The weakness: southern Utah County cities are perhaps more divided than need be. Perhaps this can be resolved.Kelli Lundgren, RepresentMeUtah!

It's southern border is mostly the SR201 except where it deviates south and takes in a square chunk of West Valley City. Why is this far west chunk of West Valley City being thrown in with Salt Lake City? West Valley City should stay with West Valley City. If District 26 needs more people then take the South Salt Lake portion at the east end of District 29. District 29 is mostly West Valley City, anyway. Keep West Valley with West Valley and Salt Lake with Salt Lake. Why take out a chunk of West Valley City and alienate us from our city?

David Edward Garber <DaveGarber1975@yahoo.com> wrote:

I've seen many U.S. Congressional redistricting proposals this summer that divide Utah into various "pizza slices" and/or "doughnut holes" but I still like this proposed regional division best. It creates one district for each cardinal direction---it creates a northern district (#1) for both Logan and Ogden to share, it creates a southern district (#4) for both Orem/Provo and St. George to share, and it then halves the remaining Wendover-SLC-Vernal corridor into both western (#2) and eastern (#3) districts via a line that bisects SLC but otherwise roughly follows I-15.

These four proposed U.S. Congressional districts split only one city (namely Bountiful, SLC, and Pleasant Grove) in each of three counties, which is rather minimal, and which will likely remain minimal as borders are readjusted in these three areas every decade. These districts also invariably keep every rural hinterland connected to its most appropriate urban center and, similarly, they invariably extend along major transportation routes rather than across impassible natural terrain, unlike various districts in most other proposals. They even let Utah's present U.S. Representatives Bishop and Chaffetz and (perhaps) Matheson all keep their present seats. These districts' shapes are not only highly contiguous and compact, but they are also far from gerrymandered and they may even look rather attractive from orbit. So, except for a lack of references to food, what's not to like about this proposal?
