Alright, I'm from Levan, about as rural as it gets. I wish we could have had an all-rural district circling all-urban districts. I don't feel represented well by a Representative from the Wasatch Front - because that's what he focuses on.

You said yourself "As if a person from Sandy has the best interest of rural voters at heart." Well this map dooms rural areas all over the state to be represented by people from Sandy or other urban cities! You're being entirely hypocritical by saying that Sandy citizens can't understand rural needs, but acting as if a Representative from the Wasatch Front will do a FANTASTIC job representing these rural needs, that you yourself said they won't have their interests at heart.

While we ARE one state, there are wide differences between different areas of the state. Salt Lake County has roughly half of the entire population, but you'd never know that based on this map. We are a heavily urban state, with 75% of our population living along the Wasatch Front. With 75% of the population, would it not make sense for 75% of the districts to be in the same area? Instead, this map purposely splits up not only similar cities (Lehi/American Fork, Mt. Pleasant/Ephraim/Manti, etc.), but at least 15 cities themselves (Lehi, Payson, Santiquin, etc.) between 2 or more districts. It makes no sense to purposely split up similar areas that work well together. If anything, not only does Salt Lake County get screwed over, (heavily Republican) Utah County does as well in the strange way it is chopped up all over the place.

I LOVE THE MAP! Utah is not "Salt Lake City" then "The rest of the state". It is one state. We have this problem where Salt Lake City doesn't think itself as part of Utah, and the old districting reflected that. People outside Salt Lake City don't like people inside Salt Lake City and vis-versa. We had one district that was polar opposite than the rest of the state. This new map moves in the direction to correct that problem. Utah is one state, and we should start thinking of ourselves as one state, not rural and urban but Utahn.

Having worked for Rep. Chaffetz in the current urban-rural split third district, I can personally assure you that even if they WANT to represent the rural areas (which I truly believe Jason wishes to do), they tend to focus entirely or nearly entirely on the urban areas, because that's where the people (and money for campaigns) is. This urban-rural myth is just that: a myth. While perhaps it may look good to some on paper, it simply does not work at all in practice.

If the rural areas had an entirely or nearly entirely rural district with a representative dedicated to SOLELY their needs, this one representative could accomplish a lot more for the rural areas than 4 representatives pretending to care about them.

As if a person from Sandy has the best interest of rural voters at heart! That's an absurd notion! Rural voters live all over the state! If you are complaining about gerrymandering, imagine if they put all rural voters in one district. The map would look like it had been hit with a shotgun blast, with a few here and a few there. You could be in one district, your neighbor could be in another, and the person 300 miles to the south might be in EITHER of them! The best way to ensure that rural voters have a voice is to make sure there are enough of them in EVERY district that all 4 Congressional representatives will have to represent their interests. Well lo and behold, that's just about what we've got here on this map!

Fascinating reading all the griping. Politics being what it is, the only way the liberal Democratic advocates in Utah would be happy with the new Congressional district map is if they could draw it up themselves and skew it in their favor. Elections have consequences, and the current map does not represent corruption, sinister plotting, or any other of the histrionic allegations currently being shouted about. It's just politics. Of course, all the loud posturing by the opposition is just politics too. Let's move on. Rep. Matheson has already demonstrated that it's possible to win in a supposedly demographically unfavorable district if you represent the people and the State's interests well. We need more like him. We've got many more serious issues on our plate. The districts are drawn, let's get to work.

Less than 33% of those eligible to vote in Utah during the last Presidential election bothered to do so.Â Even if ALL of them were LDS and they ALL voted Republican, the non-LDS could STILL HAVE OUTVOTED THEM!Â All they had to do was get off the couch and go vote.

Plan Information

Plan name: County plan
Description: This plan allows all the countys except Salt Lake to be in one district. District 1 is primarily Weber and Davis with some of Salt Lake, District 2 is most of Salt Lake county, District 3 is Utah and some of Salt Lake county and District 4 is all the rest with the rural far western part of Salt Lake county. This allows for 1 representative to be fully dedicated to the rural part of Utah and allows the others to focus on the more populus Wasatch front.

PS, using past gerrymandering as an excuse for further gerrymandering isn't exactly a logical argument. Yes, Republican's control over 75% of legislative seats (which under your logic, should give Democrats at least one seat in Congress....), but that 75% figure is not representative of the total population of voting age Utah's, that number is much closer to 62/34 (based on the results of the last presidential elections). The 75% merely reflects past gerrymandering successes, and I'm guessing that after this next election we'll see that number grow.... and the Church of Utah will take another page in the history books.
