DISQUS

Kraigthorne <kraigthorne@yahoo.com> (unregistered) wrote, in response to Bob Aagard:

It is my fault as well as Fair Boundaries. I had a plan to organize the four biggest Republican Central Committees and force a vote on what they want the districts to look like. I did not do this and for that I am sorry. The four biggest Republican Central Committees decide who gets the republican nomination for over 75% of the Utah House and Senate as well as the Governor.

Fair Boundaries is at fault, because they NEVER did anything to get Republicans to join them. On the other hand they recruited at every Democratic event they could.

The problem with all of today's Republican maps (S16, S17, S18, S19, and S20) is that there is no right way to do a wrong thing.

They all address my concerns about not dividing up Uintah Basin, SE Utah and SW Utah. But that is small consolation the way each map hacks up Salt Lake and Utah Counties and their school districts and cities and put Salt Lake and St. George in the same district even though everyone knows they both hate that idea.

No one would have time to even identify what new things are wrong with each one. The incomprehensible gerrymanders will be a blot on this legislature that should embarrass the current majority leadership for a decade if these maps or SB3002 become law.

Really, Utah is a mix of rural and urban areas - more so than any other state in the union. Should we not split our reps between the two? Shouldn't we have areas in which the elected officials can reasonably visit, or at least understand the issues on both the city and country side of the fence? I read some posts complaining that St. George and Vernal are in the same district, yet the same people would have a bull's eye which would place ALL of rural Utah (everything but the cities from Brigham to Spanish Fork) within one district. How the heck can one person possibly understand that much geography, let alone the different issues inherent with each different area? To SLC: please don't treat me in southern Utah like a fly-over state, which is the most which we will ever receive from the national elected leaders which will always treat us like a rash: scratch now and then - and always ignore as soon as possible.

Really? Splitting up Sanpete County? I swear each one of these maps is worse than the last one. I won't waste my time on this one, because like Mr. Garber I've already expressed my thoughts several times on similar maps, but I will address the differences.

Really, cutting Santiquin in half, cutting literally just a few houses of Payson off from the rest, the already mentioned chopping of Northern and Southern Sanpete County. It seems as if they took the original map and worked to find ways to make it even more awkward and chop up more communities.

This not-especially-sensible concept, in its many variations, seems to keep receiving far more love from legislators (so far) than from their constituents. Variants of this concept keep being introduced again and again and again but, still, Utah's legislators aren't rallying around these variants enough to pass any of them. Are some key GOP legislators trying to fatigue everyone else into compliance?

I think that Utah's legislators should simply find consensus on a plan that makes sense geographically, as this one does more than most, regardless of however such a plan may affect their peers' ambitions and/or their parties' agendas.Â If enough Utahns still want Matheson in Congress, then so be it.Â If enough Utahns now want Wimmer in Congress, then so be it.Â I think that Utahns will feel much happier with this process' results, overall, if their legislators can somehow minimize partisanship in this process.Â Otherwise, perhaps both SLC's "liberals" and St. George's "conservatives" will end up voting together, for example, which will render both subgroups less happy overall.

Craig Shuler CPA <shulercl@gmail.com> (unregistered) wrote:

This is a brand new gerrymander. The Garber and Plewe plans would be much better.

Bad things:

1. No roads at all connect SLC on this map with Wasatch Co., southeast, southwest and central are a wilderness hiker to Alta or go through Park City or Provo-Orem.

2. Wasatch County is separated from all three of its logical adjacent communities--Summit County, Duchesne County, and Utah County.

2. Juab County and Genola are separated from all four of their adjacent communities--the major ones being Santaquin-Payson-Spanish Fork and Sanpete County. The lesser ones being Millard and Tooele County.

3. Uintah Valley belongs in an east District, not a north one. Either way they should be with Wasatch Co.

4. Granite School District is divided in three ways.

Good things:

1. Salt Lake City & School District east west division and Davis County & School District north south divisions are reasonable.

2. Jordan District is not split up

3. Canyons District is mostly together except the Big & Little Cottonwood Canyons.

4. Central, Southeast, Southwest Utah are not split up (as in the Garber and Plewe plans).

The only thing this map has in common with the original Garber map is the outside shape of the state of Utah. To state that this is a compromise is an outright lie. The "public" process has been a sham from the outset and the public has been treated to one dog and pony show after the other. This new map that is now seriously being considered has been visible to the public for an hour--how is that including the public in the process? Easy answer--it isn't!

Join the upset citizens of Utah at 5pm until -- they kick us out. Take back the people's house! Come and express your dissatisfaction at having the wool pulled over our eyes.
